By Rick Du Brow
UPI Staff Writer

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Playwright Clifford Odets, who died last week of cancer and who had been at work on a new NBC-TV anthology series, was often described by detractors as an author who had lost stature when he left Broadway for Hollywood.

Few writers, in fact, have been such a constant target. And there was ammunition for his attackers when they compared the impact of some of his early stage plays with most of his movies. Yet, aside from the personal tragedy of his death at 57, and despite the fact that he had turned out two of the 10 teleplays he had projected as story editor for the new Richard Boone anthology, it is a pity he did not have the chance to warm up to the mass television medium with his natural bent for popular play production.

First of all, as he liked to point out, he at least had not dehumanized his characters — as most video writers have. Second, he had come to reasonable terms with his position as a creator and had himself in perspective — not entirely satisfied, but at least clear-eyed and therefore in a mood for work. Third, he was an almost impeccable craftsman — no mean quality. Fourth, he was genuinely enthused about the idea of Boone's weekly television attempt at a repertory theatre, with its own group.

Some of Odets' obituaries were peremptory. They almost read like reviews. Yet, while there is no need for false praise of the dead, his only crime was that he was not as great a playwright as some people thought he should have been. A man's life is all he has got, and is worth more than a brushoff. Those who have read or seen his plays — like "Waiting for Lefty," "Awake and Sing," "Golden Boy", "The Country Girl" and "The Flowering Peach" — surely can't be so naive as to think that remaining on Broadway would have changed his basic abilities. What he was, was a master of the uses of a theatre; he knew how to charge an atmosphere with electricity; he could excite, stir, entertain, and he had a few ideas. If he was not immense, he at least left some works to remember.

He admitted to having yearned to be a significant writer. He admitted the machine-like approach of most Hollywood films. "Everybody runs to TV," he said, indicating he might have been better off if there were no film industry. But of his movies, he said: "It's professional work, I'm a professional writer." He knew his position, precisely.

The Channel Swim: A 90-minute special about the late movie producer, Cecil B. DeMille, will air Dec. 1 on NBC-TV. On Nov. 24, same network offers a one-hour salute to the recording industry, featuring Frank Sinatra, Bing Crosby, Dean Martin, Bob Hope and Sammy Davis Jr.

Mort Sahl has been signed for the Sept. 21 permiere — and further outings — of ABC-TV's new two-hour Jerry Lewis program. There has been talk that comedian Sahl may do his personalized, satirical "news commentaries" regularly on the Saturday night Lewis series.

Jackie Cooper is expected to have Barbara Stanwyck as his costar in his planned 1964-65 CBS-TV drama series, in which he plays a county agent in the Southwest. Negro leaders Martin Luther King Jr. and Roy Wilkins will be interviewed Sunday on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

Take close look at his ring finger

By Vernon Scott
UPI Staff Writer

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Next time you see Alan Ladd in a movie take a close look at the ring of his left hand.

If he's playing a married man you'll notice a chain link wedding band glittering on the finger. If Ladd is swashbuckling around as a single man, you're liable to see any number of outsized rings adorning the digit.

One thing is certain, you'll never see it naked.

The handsome, long time screen idol claims he is not superstitious, but when it comes to his wedding ring Ladd is a fanatic.

Not since his wife, Sue, placed the ring on his finger during their wedding ceremony in Tijuana 22 years ago has the actor been without it.

"When she put that ring on my finger I made a promise that I'd never take it off," he said during a quiet lunch in the patio of his magnificent home. "And I never have."

Sue, delighted by her husband's sentiment, said, "I didn't make any such promises. But Alan has given me such beautiful jewelry that I have several wedding bands to wear with various matching outfits."

"In one of my first movies I showed up for work the first day and the director told me I'd have to take off the ring," Ladd grinned. "I told him to forget it.

"There was an impasse for a while, then one of the prop men came up with the idea of making a clamp-like ring to fit right over my wedding band. It was a big Indian head ring that hid my own ring completely."

Since then Ladd has had a variety of clamps made—at the expense of the studios, naturally—to cover his wedded status.

He has a box full of them. Western rings, signets, college rings, rings with big stones, and rings bearing the emblems of West Point, the Navy and the Air Force.

In his role of Nevada Smith for, "The Carpetbaggers" Ladd is right back where he started, wearing an Indian head ring.
