

It's Kennedy's word against that of Teller on 1961 tests

WASHINGTON (UPI) — It was Dr. Edward Teller's word against that of President Kennedy and his scientific advisers today on the issue of whether the United States cut short its 1961 nuclear tests for political reasons.

Teller, "father of the H-bomb" and chief opponent of the limited nuclear test ban treaty, urged that he and opposing experts be heard in detail behind closed Senate committee doors.

Kennedy said Teller's charge was not "valid." He told his news conference Tuesday the United States conducted the "major tests" but that "it would be very difficult to satisfy Dr. Teller in this regard."

But Teller, testifying at a Senate hearing, replied: "We could have and should have carried out more tests in the atmosphere." He said the administration did not want more tests.

Assures Senate
The President also gave the Senate assurances that its demand for "safeguards" on future testing was being carried out.

He said these included keeping U.S. laboratories activated; preparing "standby" nuclear test experiments, including improvements at Johnston Island in the Pacific; continuing "quite vigorous" underground tests, and improving U.S. facilities to detect tests by other countries.

Three nuclear experts were called to testify today by the Senate foreign relations, armed services and atomic energy committees which jointly are considering the test ban treaty.

They were Dr. Harold Brown, Pentagon director of defense research and engineering; John S. Foster, director of the Livermore Radiation Laboratory, University of California; and Norris E. Bradbury, Director of the Los Alamos Laboratories in New Mexico.

Testifies For Hours
Teller was on the witness stand for 6½ hours Tuesday, warning that if the Russians cheated successfully on the test ban "they will have won the world."

He said he was concerned about U.S. development of an anti-missile system without atmospheric testing, restrictions on nuclear aid to Allies and on development of peaceful uses of nuclear explosives.

Teller conceded he had "changed his mind" from several years ago when he favored halting atmospheric tests.

Award to Butts second highest ever made for libel

ATLANTA (UPI) — Wallace Butts, the round little man of football whose teams at the University of Georgia earned him fame for 22 years, held a new one for the record books today — a $3,060,000 libel suit judgment against the Saturday Evening Post.

It was the second highest award ever made in a libel suit and the highest ever involving a sports personality.

Butts, sometimes called "Weeping Wally" in football coaching circles, wept openly when the jury brought in its decision Tuesday in federal court. It came after seven hours and 18 minutes of deliberation and climaxed a suit that had run into its third week in testimony from more than 50 witnesses.

But Butts was chipper at a news conference an hour later. "I feel like a champ," the former coach and then athletic director said.

Other Developments
There were these immediate developments:
—The Saturday Evening Post said it will appeal the award by the jury of 12 businessmen. It has 30 days in which to file briefs.

—Georgia defensive line coach John Gregory, the only member of the Georgia athletic staff to testify for Butts, was fired from his job by Georgia coach Johnny Griffith. Gregory immediately charged the firing came because of his stand in the controversy.

—Curtis Publishing Co., publisher of the Saturday Evening Post, said in New York that it has slashed its losses for the second quarter to $1,099,000 from a loss of $14,727,000 for the same period last year.

—Southeastern Conference Commissioner Bernie Moore said the verdict should help lift "the dark cloud" hanging over intercollegiate football and the Southeastern Conference.

—An Internal Revenue Service

spokesman in Washington indicated that federal taxes may take a big chunk of any final settlement. The spokesman cited a Supreme Court decision holding that punitive damages paid to a person in a libel suit are taxable. He said also that compensatory damages also may be taxable, if the injury for which they were paid causes no loss of income.

Second Largest
The $3,060,000 award — $60,000 for actual damages and $3 million in punitive damages — was second only to the $3.5 million won by New York radio commentator John Henry Faulk against a publication, AWARE, Inc.

Faulk contended an article in AWARE connected him with a pro-Communist group and led to his dismissal by the Columbia Broadcasting System and to a subsequent blacklist in the broadcast industry.

Butts claimed that his character was smeared and his career ruined by an article, "The Story of a College Football Fix," appearing in the March 23 issue of the Post.

The Post, in the magazine article, reported that Butts, in an overheard telephone conversation, had given valuable secrets about the University of Georgia football team to Alabama coach Paul (Bear) Bryant prior to last fall's game between the two schools. Alabama won, 35-0.

Bryant also sued for $10 million and that suit is still pending in the federal court at Birmingham. The Post has asked for a change of venue.

Questions due in heiress case

PORTLAND (UPI) — Portland Police detective William Taylor was in Fremont, Neb., today to question the man believed to be the last person seen in the company of Idaho cattle heiress Irene Davis, who was found dead in the Hilton Hotel here Aug. 6.

Robert Joseph Evans, 27, was arrested in Fremont Monday on a charge of larceny by baillee. Taylor arrived late Monday night to question him.

Evans, also sought in Honolulu for violation of probation, was one of three men last seen with Miss Davis, of Payette, Idaho. She was later found in the bathtub of her room with a stocking knotted around her neck.

The Multnomah County coroner ruled her death "homicide until proven otherwise." Evans was picked up on a Clackamas County warrant charging him with the removal of an auto from a Milwaukee firm where he had been employed.
