Portland firm gets relocation of Cove park

A Portland firm, Schrader Construction Co., submitted the low bid, $389,918 for the relocation of Cove Palisades State Park in the Crooked - Deschutes River area when proposals were received Tuesday afternoon. The bids were opened by the Oregon State Highway Commission, in Salem. Also received was a bid of $436,140 by Babler Brothers for grading and paving 3.86 miles of the Deschutes River - Redmond section of the McKenzie Highway. This work will extend west from the Redmond city limits to the Cline Falls bridge approach. The Cove Palisades Park project calls for a relocation of park facilities to higher ground on two separate locations. The present site, including the old Cove orchard, will be covered by more than 200 feet of water after completion of the Round Butte Dam. Water will start backing up the Metolius, Deschutes and Crooked River canyons this winter.

On East Bank
One of the new park locations will include an area on the east bank of Crooked River, with a boat ramp and day use facilities. The other park area, west of the "saddle" between the two rivers, will have facilities for both day use and overnight camping. It will be on the east bank of the Deschutes arm of Chinook Lake. The day use area will have boat ramps and parking, and the overnight camp will have 48 trailer sites and 44 tent sites. Other facilities will include picnic areas, two rest stations, two utility buildings with laundry and showers, a bathhouse and a parks maintenance building. The new park contains 4,029 acres. The park relocation is at the expense of Portland General Electric, firm which is building the Round Butte dam.

Adult education programs seen valuable asset to U.S. society

By David Nydick
UPI Staff Writer

Adult education programs are a valuable asset to our society. They allow individuals to pursue personal interests with expert direction and instruction. Adults participate for many reasons: to obtain a high school diploma; to enjoy leisure time; as a social activity. There are many opportunities to study cultural, recreational, academic and business subjects.

The adult who completes his regular education and is now employed soon finds that there are many areas about which he would like to learn more. He makes an excellent student since he has a genuine interest in learning.

There are many community agencies sponsoring adult programs. You should investigate the many fascinating possibilities.

Question:
I am inquiring about the availability of an adult education course, in art, for a group of young parents. We have checked with our local school system and find that they do not offer adult courses. We are willing to travel a reasonable distance but do not know how to locate such a class. How should we go about solving this problem?

Blaze spreads from dump

Whipped by erratic winds, fire spread from the city dump Tuesday evening, with the Bend Fire Department called to assist in control work. Over 2,000 gallons of water was sprayed on the grass and brush blaze.

Tuesday at 5:09 p.m. the department answered a call from the Green Stamp Store on Minnesota, where smoke was reported. Source of the smoke, possibly electrical, was not located.

Late this morning, the department answered a call from the Bend Senior High gymnasium, where smoke was reported. There was no damage.

Answer:

Adult education programs have expanded rapidly during recent years. There are several approaches you might follow. Check with neighboring school systems, nearby colleges, libraries, and museums. If these institutions cannot meet your needs, try to arrange the course by yourselves. This can be done by contacting the extension division of a college. You possibly could make an arrangement with an art teacher from your local school system.

You might also perform a community service by requesting your local board of education to organize an adult education program. If there is sufficient community interest, the board of education may arrange such a program or at least permit the use of school facilities by outside groups.

Question:
I am interested in taking several college courses without enrolling for a degree. I am a high school graduate. Is this possible?

Answer:
This depends on the college.

Some institutions permit individuals to take courses without credit or as special students. You should inquire at the college missions office.

Question:
My neighbors would like to improve their ability to speak Eng-

Mild weather expected in area

Mild temperatures and little or no rain are in store for Central Oregonians in the five-day period that will extend into the Labor Day weekend, the forecast indicates.

High temperatures in Bend are expected to be near the seasonal normal, around 85 degrees, and lows will be in the 40-45 degree range.

Fair weather will be general over Oregon, the forecast notes. However, there will be low morning clouds in parts of western Oregon and along the coastlish. They also wish to become citizens of the United States. They have asked me for advice. I helped them complete the proper applications for citizenship, but I don't know where they can obtain the necessary education courses.

Answer:
Your local school system should be able to assist your neighbors. Contact the board of education or superintendent's office. They generally sponsor citizenship courses for adults or will be able to direct you to the nearest system which does. The courses are usually free, although it is possible that a fee will be charged.

You can also check with the office where the application for citizenship was filed.
