

It's a growth industry

He's thinking about kids, too — their toy needs especially

By Jesse Bogue UPI Staff Writer NEW YORK (UPI) — Most parents today have their thoughts about their children's future pointed no farther ahead than the opening of school, just around the corner.

Makers are spending tremendous amounts of money on product development, on research, and they are turning out better toys at better value than ever before, he said.

Justice Court fines assessed

Special to The Bulletin REDMOND — Percy L. Miller, Redmond, was fined $100 this week in Justice Court when he appeared on a charge of being drunk behind the wheel of an automobile on a public highway.

"The public is becoming critical," he continued, "and won't buy just anything. It is beginning to judge toys as it does any consumer product."

Bus schedules are unchanged

Special to The Bulletin PRINEVILLE — Transportation routes for school buses will follow the same schedules and approximate times as were used at the end of the last school year, according to school superintendent.

"Children are becoming much more sophisticated. It's amazing how kids have become critical and how much they remember about what they do or do not like."

"It used to be that 10 or 15 manufacturers developed a group of strong buyers and when they satisfied the buyers, the job was over. Now the buyers are aware that the child is the judge today — partly because of the TV advertising and programming — and for the first time the toy has gone from the stage of 'something under the tree' to 'something the child has asked for specifically.'"

Changes in bus schedules will be made only when information on location and number of students needing transportation would indicate a needed change.
