Mrs. Marie Elaine Marshall, 21, received the sentence as an aftermath of a domestic dispute and an automobile chase at speeds up to 110 miles per hour.

Also fined and sentenced were her husband, Archie Marshall, 26, and Mrs. Mildred Settell, 20, of McMinnville. Marshall was charged with assault with a dangerous weapon. His fine was $300 and he was sentenced to 30 days in jail.

Operation of SIAC soundly criticized by fiscal group

By Zan Stark
 UPI Staff Writer

SALEM (UPI) — Organization of the State Industrial Accident Commission (SIAC) was criticized in a scathing report issued Friday by the Legislative Fiscal Office.

The 10-page report, presented to the Legislative Fiscal Committee by principal analyst Cleighton Penwell, was immediately challenged by SIAC chairman William Callahan.

Questioning by legislators after the report was read brought out: —The commission was thinking of going back to the reorganization plan that was junked when two new commissioners were appointed by the governor.

—That the Finance and Administration Department was not working, and is not convinced the present plan is working well, either.

—A charge by Callahan that the old reorganization plan "was the brainchild of commissioners Sidney B. Lewis and Emily P. Logan," who were fired in June by Gov. Mark Hatfield.

—That while new commissioners Charles Gill Jr. and Wilfred Jordan were appointed on June 25, and abandoned the former reorganization program the following day, both insisted they had "several days to study the problem before being sworn in."

'Particulars' Demanded
 When Callahan challenged some conclusions drawn by the report, House Speaker Clarence Barton, D-Coquille, ordered the commissioners to prepare a "bill of particulars" on any inaccuracies.

The legislative committee also directed the Finance and Administration Department to review "the former and present organizational structure" of SIAC and present "the department's present opinion regarding the necessity for future change."

Penwell's report noted a survey, completed in April, 1962, which led to reorganization, cost $30,367, and pointed to net annual savings of $189,724.

"However, the survey report did not include the fact that it would cost $161,030 to affect the savings..."

Penwell also noted "the reorganization was subject to intense internal resistance... in several instances, major deficiencies in the organizational plan became known, but no positive action was taken to correct them."

"Resistance to the reorganization originated among the commission itself... commissioner Callahan was convinced it was costly, ill advised, unnecessary and would ultimately collapse."

"Commissioner Callahan had one important advantage that the other commissioners did not share: Long tenure on the commission which had given him an intimate knowledge of actual operations and a close personal relationship with the staff."

"Motives aside, it is obvious that the public interest was obscured by the rancor of the struggle."

Penwell concluded SIAC "has shown a historic need for realignment of the organizational structure," and said "it should be determined if the commission is properly organized to efficiently carry out its functions."
