

'East Side, West Side' shows some promise, reviewer feels

By Rick Du Brow UPI Staff Writer

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — CBS-TV Monday night premiered a one-hour drama series of some promise, David Susskind's "East Side, West Side," starring that exemplary actor, George C. Scott, as a social worker.

grappling with this central issue by having the lady in question get drunk and return to her apartment with a man in tow, with all neighbors looking on, thereby leaving no question she would lose her baby in court, which she did. It is true that a motivation for her action was provided — a wrenching street scene in which she and her child were the targets of vicious neighbors. Nevertheless, it seems fair to argue that a woman so concerned with keeping her baby would summon all her will power to fend off such a stupid action. The script, therefore, begged the question.

Apology offered in Negro case

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI)—The group sponsoring the national football queen contest today apologized to a University of California Negro student who was replaced as a contest escort because of his race.

There were, however, a number of reasons to recommend the debut, and to hold hope for the series' future. It had a viewpoint — that even the lowest social outcast is, after all, a human being — and there are far worse messages than that.

Another huge plus for the series is, of course, Scott. In Monday night's episode, the central role was that of the lady of the evening and the star was therefore Carol Rossen, who played it excellently. However, Scott's presence was felt throughout. He is a gentleman, a real one, with a definable face unlike Hollywood's faceless wonders; and he has irony, skepticism, humanity and toughness. He even showed a touch of what the series will need most — all the humor that is present in all human situations, in other words a recognition of the everyday comedy that gave the late and lamented "Naked City" series such distinction, and set the pace for "East Side, West Side" to match.

The incident came to light following the climax of the contest Saturday when queen contestants were presented during halftime ceremonies of the California-Iowa State football game.

A University of California honor society, The Californians, was asked by the Jaycees to select nine escorts for the contestants. Lynn Sims, 30, a Negro, was among the honor society members selected for escort duty.

Two hours before the event, however, contest officials reported some queen contestants from Southern universities objected to Sims' presence and asked that the Negro be replaced by a white student. The Californians complied with the request but later protested the action to university officials.

The formal statement issued by the Jaycees expressed the organization's regret "for the embarrassment caused Mr. Sims, the University of California and all others concerned."

The Channel Swim: William Talman, the prosecutor on "Perry Mason," plays a gunman on CBS-TV's "Gunsmoke" Oct. 12.

Boxer Archie Moore has a dramatic role on "Perry Mason" Oct. 17. Ex-heavyweight champ Rocky Marciano guests on ABC-TV's "Combat" next Tuesday.

ABC-TV admitted flatly it will not use Pete Seeger on its folksinging "Hootenanny" series because of his controversial political past. Some leading folksingers, such as Joan Baez, have refused to appear on the show because of the network's stand.

CBS-TV's "Look Up and Live," starting Oct. 13, offers a four-part drama depicting contrasting reactions of various persons to the racial question. ABC-TV's "Ben Casey" for Oct. 2 stars Sammy Davis Jr. as a baseball player caught up in the race issue.

The "Amos 'n' Andy" series, of which some Negroes disapprove on the grounds it uses exaggerated stereotypes, has been sold to stations in Western Nigeria and Kenya. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) is not happy about it.
