Selma looms as newest trouble spot in Alabama racial battle

By United Press International A new racial troublespot loomed in Alabama today — the little cotton-cattle town of Selma.

Sheriff's deputies, a volunteer posse and state troopers Tuesday arrested 156 Negroes for staging anti-segregation demonstrations. But Negro leaders were not deterred and said there would be another demonstration today.

Sheriff James G. Clark Jr. vowed to "fill up the jails" in Selma and neighboring prison camps, if necessary, to put down the protest marches.

At Birmingham, eight Negro homes and four automobiles were damaged today by two explosions. The "harassment tactics" snapped a utility pole and gouged a crater in the ground. No one was injured.

The explosions occurred just hours before the two-man presidential team of Kenneth Royall and Earl Blak was to begin separate meetings with white and Negro leaders in an effort to work out some basis for talks on the city's racial problems.

A federal court at Montgomery issued a preliminary restraining order Tuesday night prohibiting Alabama Gov. George Wallace from interfering with public school integration in Alabama. The order was considered somewhat stronger than a temporary restraining order that had been in effect against the fiery segregationist governor.

The Alabama Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that Wallace had the constitutional authority to close the state's public schools, if such closure is necessary to keep the peace. The court also said Wallace had the authority to send "such forces as are available to him" into Alabama municipalities to preserve law and order.

Other developments: Shreveport, La.: Police today were ready to use tear gas and mounted officers to break up unauthorized racial demonstrations by Negroes. This segregated northwest Louisiana city was hit by rock-throwing demonstrators for the third straight day Tuesday.

Greensboro, N. C.: James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), was expected to arrive this weekend, and a local Negro leader indicated demonstrations might be staged at that time.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Two street corner explosions damaged at least eight homes and four cars in a Negro neighborhood of this racially troubled city early today. No one was hurt.

The blasts, which police investigators theorized were planted, sheared off a utility pole at the base and dug a three-foot crater in the ground a few feet away. Shattering the early morning quiet of southwest Birmingham at around 3:50 a.m. EDT, the explosions occurred about seven hours before a two-man team representing President Kennedy was to begin a round of mediation talks aimed at restoring racial peace here. Kennedy sent the team here after an explosion Sept. 15 at a Negro church killed four girls and made the city powder-keg tense.

Rocks and debris from the explosions this morning broke windows and caused other damages in at least eight houses in the area. Four cars suffered shattered windows and body damage from flying gravel.

The nearest house to the explosions, the 22nd and 23rd in Birmingham since 1855, was occupied by John D. Hardrick, who said an object was blown through his windows and broke a mirror in a rear room. "I was sure scared," said Hardrick.

Police Inspector W. J. Haley said there was an officer only a few blocks from the explosions and he arrived at the scene "before the dust settled."

No crowds gathered at the scene and police made a door to door check of all residents. Officers had trouble getting some of the families to the door for questioning.
