

Morse says full utilization of Tongue Point planned

PORTLAND (UPI)—Sen. Wayne Morse said Friday night that plans for reactivating the abandoned Tongue Point Naval Station near Astoria are only a start toward full utilization of the base.

Morse, arriving back in Portland after a flight to Redding, Calif., in President Kennedy's jet, said "you can count on full utilization on Tongue Point as rapidly as possible."

However, he cautioned not to expect an "overnight thing." The senator was obviously elated over Kennedy's announcement that the Defense Department would establish a weapons system acquisition management school and the Coast Guard a helicopter rescue base at Tongue Point.

Morse said Interior Secretary Stewart Udall also informed him that the Interior Department has plans for the facility, which was declared surplus by the Navy in 1950.

"However, I'm not privileged to say at this time what they will be," Morse commented.

Morse said federal occupation of the facility culminated a long and persistent campaign on the part of the Oregon delegation, including Democratic Sen. Maurice Neuberger and Congressmen Robert Duncan and Al Ullman. They accompanied Kennedy on the trip south.

Morse said federal use of Tongue Point "will greatly aid one of the most depressed areas in the country."

Morse Takes Responsibility
On the matter of Kennedy's canceled Portland visit, Morse said: "Let me assume my full share of the responsibility in discouraging President Kennedy from coming to Portland."

He said, as senior member of the Oregon congressional delegation, "I wouldn't be happy to bring the President in if he was to be faced with pickets."

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had threatened to picket the dedication of Northwest Tower, a public housing project. The NAACP charged the Portland Housing Authority discriminated against Negroes in assigning tenants to the project.

"Let's get our local problems ironed out before we invite the President in," Morse said.

Second session of Ecumenical Council to open

VATICAN CITY (UPI)— Pope Paul VI will open the second session of the Ecumenical Council Sunday with a strong personal plea to the assembled prelates to continue the great work of church "renewal" begun by the late Pope John XXIII.

The "State of the Church" address, "Outing of the Pope's hopes and aims for the historic meeting, will climax the three-hour opening ceremony in St. Peter's Basilica.

More than 2,700 cardinals, patriarchs, archbishops, bishops and abbots have come to Rome from every corner of the world to participate in the council's deliberations, which will continue through Dec. 4.

During Sunday's ceremony, they will advance to the papal throne in front of the altar of St. Peter's to kiss the Pope's ring in token of their loyalty and obedience.

Vatican sources said Pope Paul's address, delivered in Latin from the high-backed crimson throne, will be a forthright invitation to the council to undertake bold reforms in the organization and liturgy of the church.

The new pontiff, who celebrated his 66th birthday Thursday, already has made clear his active sympathy with Roman Catholic liberals who feel that far-reaching adaptations are needed to bring the church into effective contact with the modern world.

He also has taken steps to simplify and speed up the proceedings of the council, and to give the press and public more information about what takes place in the daily debates.

These changes are heartening to liberal prelates, who were frustrated at the first session of the council last fall by the control which conservatives exercised over council machinery.

"I think prospects for this session are very promising," said Joseph Elmer Cardinal Ritter of St. Louis, an American leader of the liberal group. "We should make real progress."

Bishop Joseph Edward Hodges of Wheeling, W. Va., also predicted that the council will "move along faster" at this session because of lessons learned at the first session and the intensive preparation that took place during the recess.

At the final session yesterday, Dr. Roy E. Buehler, director of research at Hillcrest School of Oregon, lectured on the psychological social basis of a small group processes, with specific applications to the problem of juvenile delinquency. Demonstrations of family and teenage group therapy followed.

Before adjournment, Helleck, the retiring president, expressed gratitude to the officials and townspeople of Bend for providing "a warm, friendly atmosphere."

Weekly disease report issued

One scarlet fever, two influenza and three pneumonia cases were listed by 60 per cent of available medical sources reporting communicable diseases in Deschutes County this week.

In Crook County, 63 per cent of sources reported two influenza cases.

All Jefferson County sources listed two enteritis and three gastroenteritis.

The disease reports are submitted each week to the Tri-County Health Department.

Valachi appearance much different from Costello's

By William D. Laffler
UPI Staff Writer

A man with a raspy voice talked and a nation listened.

He was on television but only his hands showed on the screen. He was the star witness at a Senate crime hearing but he didn't want his face exposed.

His name was Frank Costello and he sat before a keen group of inquisitors which included Sen. Estes Kefauver, Sen. Charles Tobey and special counsel Rudolph Halley, all of whom now are dead.

Despite the brilliance of the men before him, Costello was tight lipped and not much information was obtained other than he owned parts of companies that made "the best braier on the market" and something resembling ketchup dolls. Costello eventually walked out of the hearing and was charged with contempt of Congress.

Faces Deportation
At the time, Costello was said to be the head of a nationwide crime syndicate. This was more than 10 years ago, and Costello has been in and out of prison and now faces possible deportation.

Costello's appearance before the Kefauver committee and his reluctance to talk was in sharp contrast to the star role played this week by Joseph Valachi, a self-admitted murderer turned informer to save his own skin.

Valachi, who also has a raspy voice, was willing to talk at length and he did it and he did not object to his face appearing on television.

He unraveled a story about an organization which he calls "Cosa Nostra" and says consists of a crime network in major cities. He put the finger on Vito Genovese, now in Leavenworth, as the boss and blamed him for at least one unsolved murder.

Secret Talks
Valachi began talking about a year ago in secret sessions with the Justice Department after he feared he was marked for execution by members of his "Cosa Nostra" family. But he had not talked publicly until Friday.

Those who have questioned Valachi during the past year report he has given them valuable information.

Whether the testimony given by only one man, an individual with a long police record that includes murder, war profiteering and narcotics peddling, can help break the crime syndicates remains to be seen.

For instance, Valachi said Genovese...
