

Rockefeller assures foes he's 'in this thing to win'

NASHUA, N. H. (UPI) — Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, campaigning for the Republican presidential nomination, served notice today on any potential rivals that he was "in this thing to win."

The 55-year-old New York governor, who Thursday became the first announced GOP candidate for the nation's highest office, lost no time sailing into President Kennedy and Republican Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona, a frontrunner in the polls.

Rockefeller, who considers himself the "underdog" in his bid for a victory in the New Hampshire primary, first in the national presidential primary, March 10, will tour industrial plants here and in Manchester today before opening a "Rockefeller for president" headquarters at Concord's Highway Hotel. He will return to New York City this afternoon.

"Thrilled" By Reception

Even a steady downpour of rain through the first day of his formal campaign failed to dampen the governor's enthusiasm. He said he was "thrilled" by his reception in the New Hampshire areas where he went on walking tours in Manchester and Nashua.

"I look forward with keen anticipation to the campaigning in the state," Rockefeller said in explaining that he will be at the call of former Gov. Hugh Gregg, his New Hampshire campaign manager.

When asked Thursday night during a taped television interview, if he thought he could beat Kennedy, Rockefeller replied, "Frankly, I think I can."

He appeared on WMUR-TV, Manchester.

He added that any GOP candidate nominated by the convention could win. Rockefeller said he would support the convention's choice in 1964.

In explaining his abrupt withdrawal from the presidential nomination race four years ago, Rockefeller said the GOP at that time had been committed to Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

"I don't think they have made any commitments yet at this time. I think however, there are emotional allegiances."

Cites Basic Issues

The governor said the basic issues in the country today were "unemployment and the inability of President Kennedy to get the country moving again with the vigor we had heard so much about."

The governor admitted his divorce and subsequent remarriage was a "problem" in his political position. He had been asked what effect he felt his remarriage would have. He said that Mrs. Rockefeller would take a "very active" part in the New Hampshire primary campaign. However, she did not accompany the governor on the present visit to New Hampshire. She was along on a recent two-day swing when Rockefeller made a test of the political atmosphere before deciding to enter the primary contest.

While campaigning in sections of the state Thursday, Rockefeller took swipes at Goldwater and unleashed an attack on President Kennedy's domestic and foreign policies.

He challenged Goldwater to oppose him in state primaries and charged that the Arizona conservative had placed himself outside the main stream of Republican thought with some of his campaign statements.

Mentions Goldwater's Proposals

Specifically, Rockefeller mentioned Goldwater's proposals to abolish the progressive income tax and farm support prices, roll back of Social Security and to withdraw from the United Nations.

Rockefeller said the New Hampshire primary offered an opportunity to all candidates to campaign "forthrightly and unadornedly by fence-straddling and doubletalk."

He said he "embodies the progressive traits" of the New Hampshire voters more than Goldwater does.

Although he did not accuse Goldwater of supporting segregation, Rockefeller said the Arizona senator "does not want to see a civil rights bill of any substance go through the Senate."

"I think for the Republican party to even appear to be a party of segregation, racism or sectionalism would be its death knell," he said.

Rockefeller flew to New Hampshire after making public in Albany, N.Y., the long expected announcement of his candidacy.

During a news conference here, he accused the Kennedy administration of "lack of true understanding of the Soviet threat" in its handling of the Berlin crisis this week and the sale of wheat to Russia.

Theme selected for service

"Men and Missions" will be the theme for the 11 a.m. service at the Free Methodist Church, 49 Gordon Road. A program depicting the work of 210 Free Methodist missionaries on 23 fields will be presented by laymen of the church. Similar programs will be held in other churches of the denomination.

Taking part in the local program will be Keith Snodgrass, Lethe Foster, Forrest Lucas and Charles Ellis, according to the Rev. Byron Jacobson.

Highlight of the year for Free Methodist, according to the Rev. Byron Jacobson, was the opening of a new field in the Republic of Congo. In this area recently vacated by another mission, 7,000 members were received into the church. Over 5,000 students enrolled in 80 schools have become the responsibility of the mission.

The denomination is sending 15 new missionaries to foreign fields this fall.

Rains continue to ease drought in eastern U.S.

By United Press International

Heavy rains continued to ease the summer long drought in New England today. Three inches of snow fell in Oregon.

Rumford, Maine, reported 1.81 inches of rain during the night. The rainfall tapered off from Virginia northward but heavy showers still swept the Northeast.

The Weather Bureau called the rain in New York "drought breaking". The official rainfall at New York's Central Park since the storm started Tuesday night was 4.28 inches—the most rainfall in any storm since Aug. 11, 1955.

Nearly 3 inches of rain fell in New York City Thursday alone, the most in one day since July 30, 1955.

Thick fog blanketed the nation's midsection from the Great Lakes to the central Gulf Coast region. Hazardous driving warnings were issued for northern Illinois. Visibility at Chicago's O'Hare Field and Midway Airport, the Glenview (Ill.) Naval Training Station and the Joliet, Ill., airport was reduced to zero.

A storm off the Pacific dumped almost 2 inches of rain at Newport, Ore., and 3 inches of snow fell at Burns in eastern Oregon.

Sen. Fulbright raps press for Hollywood film junket

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. J. William Fulbright, D - Ark., suggests that the nation's press "take an honest look at its own practices" before casting implications on persons in public life.

Fulbright cited a New York newspaper story describing a $250,000 press junket staged to promote an upcoming movie.

The story said about 250 reporters from 23 countries and 53 cities in the United States got free transportation to Hollywood and housing and services for four days. In return, it said, some very "favorable" articles were written about the movie, "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World." Only five newspapers paid the expenses of their reporters, the story said.

"At a time when the press is so quick to attach grave consequences to the activities of others, I suggest the journalism profession take an honest look at its own practices," Fulbright said.

"Its responsibilities to the public in terms of honesty and integrity are no less than the responsibilities resting on those who serve that same public as elective and appointed officials."

"The newspaper junket on behalf of a movie may be defended by some because of its relatively harmless objective. I would remind my colleagues and the members of the press that our recent hearings on foreign lobbying showed such activities were carried on by foreign interests—with similar 'favorable' acceptance by the press—where the objectives were more serious and sometimes even conflicted with policies of our government."

SOLVE BURGLARY

CINCINNATI, Ohio (UPI)—Detectives said Thursday that the holdup of a suburban service station managed by Jesse L. Powell, 40, had been solved.

Police Lt. Herbert Vogel said Powell, of Cincinnati, admitted he was not robbed of $196 last April, but had taken the money himself to pay personal bills.

Increase of 1963 per capita supply of beef seen

By Gaylord P. Godwin
UPI Staff Writer

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Agriculture Department predicts the per capita supply of beef in the United States next year will be even higher than the record being set in 1963.

This supply of beef could mean serious price problems in the cattle industry toward the end of 1964—close to presidential election time.

In a review of the livestock and meat situation, the department said consumption of red meat in the United States this year is expected to reach 170 pounds per person. This is 6 pounds more than in 1962. Most of the gain will come from beef. Pork consumption will be up about a pound, but consumption of veal and lamb and mutton together will be down close to a pound.

The agency said consumption of beef this year is expected to set a new record of about 95 pounds per person, up from 89 pounds in 1962. The department said beef cattle numbers have increased sufficiently to sustain both the higher level of consumption and a larger cattle inventory which will provide the basis for even larger beef supplies in 1964.

Inventory Increase

Present indications are that inventory numbers of cattle on Jan. 1 will be close to 197 million head, up about 3 per cent from the 193.8 million head on farms a year earlier. Other estimated red meat consumption per capita for 1963 includes pork, 65 pounds; veal, 5 pounds; and lamb and mutton, 4.9 pounds.

The department said fed cattle supplies and prices in 1964 will be strongly influenced by the number of cattle and calves placed on feed during the next few months. So far this fall the movement of feeder cattle into feedlots has been slow, although by October feeder prices were from $2 to $3 under a year earlier.

If large numbers are roughed through the winter instead of going to feedlots, fed cattle prices likely will be somewhat higher by spring than in October-December, 1964.

Price Problems

"In that case, however," the department said, "serious price problems could develop toward the end of 1964 and early in 1965."

The department said hog prices likely will continue below year-earlier levels this winter, but then average a little higher next spring as slaughter supplies decline.

The agency said the 1964 lamb crop probably will be down between 4 and 5 per cent, and slaughter likely will be down a little next year. The department said prices likely will average about the same as in 1963, reflecting stiff competition from beef.

The per capita consumption of beef has increased more in the past nine years than the per capita consumption of poultry.

Department statistics show that beef consumption per capita in 1963 will be about 95 pounds, up 13 pounds from the per capita intake of 82 pounds in 1955. For the same period, poultry consumption increased 11.1 pounds—from 26.3 pounds in 1955 to an estimated 37.4 pounds in 1963.
