

Athletic purists taking aim on tough guy names of yesteryear

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — The purists are having their day in sports and their influence has extended to the appellations of players. And more's the pity. The proper given names of athletes appear in print these days and it's enough to make di-hardys yearn for the time when a nickname described a man's prowess.

Time was when sobriquets conjured up images of scowling, rambunctious athletes. Rookies in professional football quivered at the likes of "Bulldog" Turner, "Tuffy" Leemans and "Bruiser" Kinnard.

It would have been a loss to sports journalism had the famed New York Giant manager had been referred to only as John Joseph McGraw. But it was "Mugsy" who baited umpires, invited carping opponents under the stands or heaped scorn upon a player who committed a boner.

Tagged As Iron Man
Joe McGinnity, who asked to pitch virtually every day—and did — was "The Iron Man." Sheer shortstop skill won Dave Bancroft the tag "Beauty." But the "Beast" was Jimmy Foxx, a do-all player who committed mayhem at the plate.

There were imposing names to be sure. But it wasn't long before these nomenclatures underwent surgery. Abraham Lincoln Bartley of old Chicago Cubs was dubbed "Sweet Bread."

Charles Busted Baldwin of Detroit soon became accustomed to "Lady." Wellington Hunt Baldwin is a name that invites derision and he readily accepted "Wimpy." George Longfellow Winter settled for "Sassafraz." Spurgeon Ferdinand Chandler is fine for a British diplomat but it was "Spud" to his Yankee teammates.

Musty records failed to explain antonyms in the O'Rourke. James Henry O'Rourke of the old Giants was the "Orator" but Timothy Patrick O'Rourke of St. Louis was "The Voiceless."

Known as Deacon
Mannerly deportment and interest in church activities identified William McKechnie as "The Deacon." A similar appellation applied to Everett Scott.

Nearly 80 Smiths played major league baseball not excluding one who began life as Giuseppe Perilo.

Yet curiously, no one ever thought of a nickname for Christian Wilhelm von de Ahe, a native German who managed St. Louis in 1884.

Harold apparently didn't catch the fancy of fans. That's why Traynor was known as "Pie"; Reiser as "Pistol Pete"; and Shumacher as "Prince Hall."

Does anybody know why Russell Aubrey Blackburne of the White Sox was known as "Lena"?

Black Hawks' Mikita adds 1 point to lead

MONTREAL (UPI) — Center Stan Mikita of the Chicago Black Hawks added a point to his individual scoring lead in National Hockey League action today while teammate Bobby Hull took over second place from Canadian Jean Beliveau.

Mikita, with a goal and two assists last week, has 59 points, including 24 goals. Hull, who pushed his league-leading goal total to 30 — the fifth straight season he has scored at least that many goals — has 55 points and Beliveau is next with 54, including 36 assists, the most in the league.

Andy Bathgate of New York Rangers moved into fourth place with 45 points while Ken Wharram of Chicago slipped to fifth with 44 points.

By pulling the biggest upset of the season in defeating the Stanley Cup champion Toronto Maple Leafs 11-0 Saturday, the Boston Bruins enabled the goaltending team of Glenn Hall and Denis DeJordy to keep Chicago ahead in the Vezina Trophy race. The two Chicago netminders have allowed 99 goals in 44 games for a 2.25 average.

Reg Fleming of Chicago had his first penalty-free week of the season but he still led in that department with 110 minutes in the penalty box.

Walt Whitman unshaken Archie Moore tries being a poetic prophet

By Oscar Fraley
UPI Staff Writer
MIAMI (UPI)—Archie Moore, the old mongoose who once wrote in hem-stitching on other people's faces, today tried his pen as a poetic prophet without once shaking Walt Whitman or even Cassius Clay.

Clay is, of course, the bombastic young feller out of Louisville who will entangle with Charles (Sonny) Liston at Miami Beach on Feb. 25 for the world heavyweight title. At the moment he is regarded as a better poetic risk than a contender.

However, without getting into poetic comparisons as beehives, a man who stowed away the only mongoose in four fistic rounds. Clay admitted that he thought Archie's verse was "cool."

Clay In Four
This may be akin to Picasso praising Dali, but the reason shortly becomes understandable. The truth be known, neither Clay nor Moore is regarded as an expert in heroic verse, but Moore's slugging sonnet picks Clay to win it in four rounds.

I think Archie starts out by visualizing Clay, in something faintly resembling Iambic pentameter, as a "Kentucky Babe" with a "loud mouth" who when he climbs into the ring is desperately fighting back a desire to make like Paavo Nurmi.

Playing on Clay's previous broadcast, he rhymes out von Cassius though he is "too pretty to die but with butterflies in his belly is willing to try."

"I'm gonna let you read it from there."

Liston Too Late
"The Lip took a deep bow and drew a nice hand; He previously had boasted 'I'm the best in the land.' Better'n the best, he was wont to say, 'I am the greatest, the cash-us of Clay.'"

"Clay sees the clock but the time he can't tell; It's too late now, for there goes the bell; From the corner came the Bear, steaming like a freight; Swung where Clay was, a split second too late."

"He didn't know what he did, desperately sticking to plan; But Big Mouth moved so fast, Liston never did land; Clay thought 'well that Bear is so slow this is real funny, I'll put on a show and give 'em a run for their money.'"

"The bell rings for round two, Sonny ain't been on the floor, Says Clay 'I was gonna let the bum go eight, now I'll end it in four'; Here it's only round two and I've learned something new, The Bear goes in four if it's the last thing I do."

End poetry. But it proves one thing for sure. That Archie was a great fighter.

Dominate stats

Seattle Totems gain gusto with wild week

By United Press International
That high scoring Seattle team pretty much dominated latest Western Hockey League statistics today.

The Totems had a wild time over the past week, scoring nine goals in one game and 10 in another.

Guyle Fielder, the league's all-time scoring king, spent most of the week helping his teammates Bobby Barlow and Del Topoll fire the puck into the nets and thereby helped himself, also.

Fielder added eight points to his total and now has 15 goals and a league-leading 55 assists for 70 points. This puts him 13 points ahead of Denver's Lou Jankowski.

Barlow scored his third hat trick of the season Sunday night and has tallied 28 goals to lead that department.

Topoll grabbed 10 points in three games to rate as player of the week and climb into ninth place among league scorers with 42 points.

Seattle has another league leader in Larry Zeidel, who spent 10 minutes on the sidelines to run his penalty total to 129 minutes or more than two full games.

Denver's goalie, Al Millar, incurred a $200 fine and a stern warning from the league president after losing his temper at Vancouver last Tuesday and hitting another player with his stick.

Millar has played poorly since then and Denver therefore has no longer looked too good for the rest of the league. Millar, who has been recalled by Toronto, departs still leading the league's net-minders with a 2.89 average. But the once invincible Denver team appears to be in deep trouble.

Denver, which led by 21 points only a few days ago, now has a 13-point lead over Los Angeles. Seattle and San Francisco are deadlocked for third place, three games farther back at 42 points.

Two of the league's six teams don't make the playoffs and Portland (38) and Vancouver (35) seem likely candidates to sit out the post-season competition.

Even if the rest of the league cannot catch up with Denver, the Invaders will no longer be the automatic choice in the playoffs following their miserable showing of late.

There was no action Monday night in the WHL. Tonight, it's Seattle at San Francisco and Portland at Vancouver.

Wilt, Oscar still lead NBA scoring stats

NEW YORK (UPI)—The National Basketball Association scoring leaders are the same—Wilt Chamberlain on top and Oscar Robertson second—but there are some new additions to the top ten this week.

Statistics released by the league office today showed that Cliff Hagan of the St. Louis Hawks has moved into ninth place replacing Wayne Embry of Cincinnati and John Havlicek of Boston has taken the 10th spot held by New York's Len Chappell.

Chamberlain leads the elite list with 1,553 points in 44 games for a 35.3 average. Robertson has 1,407 points in 47 games for a 29.9 mark.

Hagan moved up with 900 points in 45 games (19.6) and Havlicek made it with 878 points in 41 games (21.4).

Chamberlain also leads in two other departments — field goal percentage (.522) and rebounds (1013).
