Seattle Seahawks linebacker K.J. Wright (50) is one of 24 unrestricted free agents on the team.

Seahawks

But if looking back is tough, not knowing what's ahead for many Seahawks won't be any easier.

Twenty-four Seattle players will now be unrestricted free agents, a list that includes key players such as K.J. Wright, Chris Carson, Shaquill Griffin, David Moore, Ethan Pocic, Jacob Hollister and Mike Iupati, as well as a number of vets who were on one-year deals such as Greg Olsen, Benson Mayowa, Bruce Irvin and Carlos Hyde.

Both Wright and Griffin said they hope to be back, but also said they had no idea what may happen.

"Hopefully everything works out," Griffin said. "Hopefully I can be a Seahawk forever."

Said Wright, who just concluded his 10th year and has the longest tenure on the team: "I love this team, I love this city. So just make it happen."

But Wright said he would consider playing elsewhere if it comes to that.

Griffin also knows there's no guarantee he'll be back, which adds to the fact that he may not get to play with his twin brother, Shaquem, in the future. Shaquem, who has been with the Seahawks the past three years, will be a restricted free agent, and each may be presented with the possibility of having to move on.

Shaquill Griffin, one of four players who spoke to the media Sunday, said that realization hit hard Saturday night.

"I had times last night when I felt like I was going to break down and cry, just reminiscing on everything," he said. "It's been a crazy four years, an even better three years playing with my brother."

Defensive end Carlos Dunlap also isn't 100% sure he'll be back, though he made clear he wants to be.

After he was acquired in October, Dunlap agreed to a re-structured contract that means he has a $14.1 million cap hit in 2021. The deal moved $3 million of his 2020 salary to a bonus that he will receive if he is on the Seahawks' roster on the fifth day of the new league year in March. The new league year, and free agency, is set to begin March 17, and the bonus means Seattle will either decide to cut Dunlap, rework his deal somehow or simply keep him for what would be the final year of his contract.

"I'd love to stay in Seattle as long as they'll have me," said Dunlap, who is 31. He said he wants to play long enough to get to 100 career sacks (he has 87.5) and reach a Super Bowl.

But the Seahawks will have to make some tough calls as they are already listed at having just $17.5 million in cap space for 2021 with just 34 players under contract, via OverTheCap.com.

As the Seahawks begin to grapple with those decisions, players now not only head home but also out of the structure of the NFL environment that included daily COVID-19 testing, something coach Pete Carroll said after the game is a concern — and something he was going to make a point to address when he talked to the team for the last time.

Sunday was mostly spent wondering what might have been.

"It's very frustrating," Wright said of seeing the season end before the conference title round for the sixth straight year. "It's very disappointing. And we've got to get better and find ways to just get to those playoff moments, and just make it happen, because somebody's got to be there. I feel like it should have been us this year."

Ducks

The Ducks, whose roster was already thin thanks to injuries, could move sophomore forward Chandler Lawson into the starting lineup if Figueroa is out. Lawson, who started 12 games last season, is averaging 5.3 points and 3.9 rebounds in 17.5 minutes this season. He played a season-high 24 minutes against the Utes and was tied for the team-lead with six rebounds. He also scored four points, including a crucial put-back late in the game, and had two blocks.

3. Not as dominant down low

Oregon had been feasting on opponents under the basket this season until these last two games.

Heading into the weekend, the Ducks hadn't been outrebounded in a game this season and had an overall plus-7.4 rebounding margin. They also were outscoring opponents in the paint by an average of 15 points a game (40-25).

But Colorado won the rebounding battle 40-28 and set a season-high on the boards by an opponent. Utah also outrebounded the Ducks 36-27. Of course, the Utes did shoot 56% so there weren't a ton of rebounds to be had on the defensive end.

Oregon outscored Colorado 42-38 in the paint but the Buffaloes still scored a season-high by opponent in that area — until Utah, that is, which outscored the Ducks 40-28 in the paint.

4. Two bad halves, just one loss

Oregon's defense pulled a disappearing act in the second half against Colorado and didn't reappear until the second half against Utah.

It was pretty ugly in between.

In the second half against the Buffaloes and the first half against the Utes, Oregon allowed a combined 89 points on 61% shooting (34-for-56) and was outrebounded 38-23, including seven offensive boards in the second half for Colorado.

The Ducks only trailed the Buffaloes 33-31 at halftime but allowed 46 points on 55% shooting in the second half in the 79-72 loss.

Utah continued to abuse Oregon's defense in the first half Saturday when it shot 68% from the field en route to a 43-33 halftime lead.

The Ducks turned it around in the second half, holding the Utes to 30 points on 44% shooting and sparking the offense with six steals and 20 points off turnovers.

"That first half defensive effort was just unacceptable," Altman said after the Utah game. "I can't put it any other way. Very disappointed in our preparation, our sense of urgency. The second half, by contrast, was very good."

5. Williams Jr. knows how to rebound

... and not just when he's cleaning up on the boards.

The junior forward had his worst game of the season on Thursday against Colorado when he scored a season-low three points on 1-of-8 shooting and had a season-low four rebounds.

"Eric was not good tonight," Altman bluntly said after the loss.

Well, he was against Utah.

Williams put the poor performance in the past by scoring a season-best 19 points on 6-of-13 shooting. He made 3-of-6 from the 3-point line, 4-for-5 from the free-throw line, shared the team lead with six rebounds, and had a season-high three blocks.

DEAR ABBY

Write to Dear Abby online at dearabby.com or by mail at P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069

Dear Abby: My husband and I are going on 19 years of marriage and have three teenage girls. We have had multiple rounds of marriage counseling, mostly with good results, although the benefits seem to be short-lived. Most of our problems have stemmed from my husband's drinking or smoking pot. He's not abusive, he's a good provider, but he just likes to get high. Thank God it's not often, but I'm not nor have I ever been OK with it.

Our girls recently found his pot stash and helped themselves. When I questioned them about where they got it, they admitted they found their dad's stash. For me, this is the last straw. How can I teach my kids this is not OK when their dad's actions say otherwise? I'm now made out to be the prude since apparently I'm "no fun."

I'm a nurse, and even if it were legal in our state, I wouldn't use it. I told my husband that I'm done and I'm ready for a divorce. He says I'm being ridiculous. Do I need to lighten up? I think I already know your answer, but I just need to see it to validate my feelings.

— Anti-Drug Wife and Mom

Dear Anti-Drug: Although marijuana may be legal in an increasing number of states, "supplying" drugs to minors is against the law in all of them. What happened cannot and should not be ignored, but ending a good marriage because your husband likes to use pot OCCASIONALLY seems extreme.

It may take more visits to a marriage and family therapist for you to agree to disagree on this, but it is very important that your daughters be disabused of the idea that what they did was OK with either of you. It's time you and your husband form a united front, and he needs to find a better place to keep his stash.

Dear Abby: Because of the recent COVID-19 crisis, my wife and I, like so many others, have been stuck at home. I have asked her questions about former boyfriends and lovers. She told me some things, but when I bring it up now, she gets defensive and accuses me of belittling her and bringing back memories she has asked God to help her forget. I feel I am owed an explanation since they all took place while we were dating (including with my best friend) and with a house sitter after we were married. Am I wrong to bring it up after many years and a great marriage?

P.S. It's eating at me, and her stonewalling by saying "I can't remember" is frustrating, especially because all her friends talk about her great memory.

— Depressed in Texas

Dear Depressed: Yes, you are wrong because this isn't getting you anywhere positive. In fact, it's the opposite. If you are looking for a divorce after "many years and a great marriage," keep digging.

While your wife's poor judgment and infidelity are deeply regrettable, the two of you managed to build a life together and move beyond it. Sometimes people forget what they need to forget in order to function. Accept it and use your quarantine time to do something more positive than playing "20 Questions."

YOUR HOROSCOPE
