ADULT BOOKS

"We Keep the Dead Close: A Murder at Harvard and A Half Century of Silence," by Becky Cooper

This true crime story is perfect for mystery lovers looking for a big book to escape into this winter. In 1969, Harvard archaeology student Jane Britton is found dead in her apartment after missing her comprehensive exams. Cooper, a recent Harvard graduate, twines her story with Britton's to examine power and gender structures at the revered institution as she tries to solve the murder. The book is dense and full of detail, but never slow, as Cooper tracks down cops, friends, colleagues, and suspects, many of whom still stalk the halls of Harvard's Peabody Museum.

"The Office of Historical Corrections," by Danielle Evans

Short story enthusiasts and those struggling to concentrate on longer narratives will want to pick up Evans's collection of six stories and one novella. Evans is a master of short fiction, taking her characters in surprising directions both emotionally and physically. Her stories examine universal concepts such as love and grief through the lens of race and history, asking readers to think about American culture in new ways. But this collection is not heavy. Evans' characters are modern and vibrant, and the twists will delight as much as shock readers into fresh perspectives.

—Jenny Pedersen, community librarian

In "Beyond the Gender Binary," Vaid-Menon weaves anecdotes about their own life with a succinct analysis of the colonial origins of the gender binary and the contradictions between how gender nonconforming people are talked about and their lived realities. The arsenal of tools for gender self-determination and liberation within this compact book make this a must read for all gender diverse people and their co-conspirators.
