SPORTS BRIEFING

BASKETBALL

Blazers' have 1st postponement of season Wednesday night — The Portland Trail Blazers' game Wednesday night against the Memphis Grizzlies in Portland was postponed due to COVID-19 contact tracing, the NBA announced. The contract tracing involved the Grizzlies, according to the league. Memphis, according to the NBA, did not have the required minimum of eight players needed to play a game. This is the first Blazers game to be postponed this season.

OSU women have game postponed due to opponent's COVID-19 concerns — A women's basketball game between Oregon State and Washington scheduled for 7 p.m. Friday in Corvallis was postponed Wednesday because of a COVID-19 outbreak within the Husky program. It is the seventh time Oregon State has had a Pac-12 game postponed this season. The Beavers, who have played just once since Dec. 19, return to action at 2 p.m. Sunday against Washington State in Corvallis. Oregon State (3-4, 1-4 Pac-12) postponed five games when the Beaver program was put on pause due to a COVID-19 situation on Dec. 20. Last week, OSU-Arizona State was postponed due to a COVID-19 outbreak at Arizona State. It is unknown if Oregon State will make up any of the postponed conference games. Oregon State has played seven games this season, the fewest in the Pac-12.

GOLF

Justin Thomas to attend training after slur — Justin Thomas intends to go through an individual training program to "become a better person" after he was picked up uttering a homophobic slur under his breath when he missed a putt at a tournament in Hawaii this month. Clothing brand Ralph Lauren ended its long-time sponsorship with Thomas following the incident two weeks ago, which the No. 3-ranked American golfer described as "humiliating and embarrassing and it's not me."

Elks

"The ultimate goal is not go win a bunch of ball games — without a doubt I am one of the most competitive people that you will meet and I want to win — but I think the ultimate goal for me and what I have learned is that I can't control if we win these games, but I can control if these guys become better human beings. And that is the goal."

Nobach coaches baseball year-round. During the Elks' offseason he works for Base by Pros, a baseball and softball training program in Washington with a focus on the development of mindset, skill, strength and character.

During the last 10 months of the COVID-19 pandemic — when high school athletes in Oregon and Washington have had to routinely adjust to canceled seasons and different health regulations, and still find ways to improve — there has been a greater emphasis on building mentally strong athletes. "The whole point of the men-

Bills

"I said to myself, 'If we handle this the right way, this could turn out to be a positive instead of a negative.' It didn't have to be something that carried over to the next one and affect the rest of your season," Frazier said this week. "To our players' credit, I think they rebounded. ... That was a hard loss for a lot of reasons and they didn't let it hold them back."

The Bills (15-3) have won eight straight since and are preparing to make their first AFC championship game appearance in 27 years Sunday, when Buffalo travels to face the top-seeded Kansas City Chiefs (15-2).

Though much of the credit for Buffalo's success has centered on a dynamic Josh Allen-led offense, the defense has shown signs of shedding its early season deficiencies to find itself gradually peaking over the final half of the year. Buffalo has allowed just 137 points since the loss to Arizona after giving up 273 points in its first 10 games. And rather than blowing leads, the defense is now closing out victories as evidenced in two playoff wins.
