Beavers' RB coach to fill same role with Chicago Bears

- Oregon State running backs coach Michael Pitre is leaving the school in order to coach running backs with the NFL's Chicago Bears, according to an ESPN report. Pitre has been at Oregon State for the past three years. Earlier this offseason, Pitre was given the title of recruiting coordinator. Pitre is only the second assistant coach to leave Oregon State since Jonathan Smith became coach in 2018. Secondary coach Greg Burns left after one year for a coaching position at USC for the 2019 season (Burns is now at Arizona). Pitre figured to be attractive after a three-year run coaching Jermar Jefferson, who nounced in December he was leaving school early for the NFL draft. Pitre also coached two years with Artavis Pierce, who just finished his rookie year with the Bears.

Ducks men close to full strength after 2nd pause due to COVID-19 — Oregon will be close to full strength for its second game in 26 days. The Ducks (9-3, 4-2 Pac-12) returned to practice Tuesday following their second COVID-19 related pause and will host Washington State Thursday night (8 p.m., FS1). Oregon coach Dana Altman said except for starting forward Eric Williams Jr. (12.3 points, 6.3 rebounds), all players who have seen action thus far are expected to be available and point guard Will Richardson, who has missed the season following left thumb surgery, is drawing closer to returning.

UO women add game Saturday vs. UC Davis — Despite being on pause due to COVID-19 protocols that have caused postponements for its last three games, including Friday night, Oregon women's basketball has added a nonconference game for Saturday. The No. 12 Ducks (11-3, 9-3 Pac-12) will host UC Davis at 6 p.m. Saturday at Matthew Knight Arena, the school announced Wednesday. The game will be live streamed via the athletic department's website. Oregon's game against Arizona State (8-6, 4-6), originally scheduled for 8 p.m. Friday, was postponed on Tuesday due to COVID-19 protocols. A rescheduled date for the game with ASU has not been determined.

Beavers add games to schedule, up to 52 - The Oregon State Beavers on Wednesday added eight games to the 2021 baseball schedule, plugging in matchups against the University of Portland, Gonzaga and UC Irvine to a slate that now includes 52 games. The schedule remains a work in progress as a result of restrictions and safety guidelines surrounding the coronavirus pandemic, but Oregon State is expected to play 56 games when it's finalized. The Beavers, who began practice last week with a deep roster and championship aspirations, will open the season Feb. 19 against Kansas State in Surprise, Arizona, as part of the Sanderson Ford College Baseball Classic.

While Moss and his Mountain View teammates are accustomed to seeing defenses focused on thwarting their rushing attack, the 7-on-7 game has allowed them to learn about defenses that focus on stopping the pass. "Learning the different defenses as well as the concepts you can run on offense is a pretty big difference and it has helped me a lot for regular football," Moss said.

Last week, Emery, a sophomore for the Lava Bears, was in Texas playing in the Offense-Defense All-American Bowl — a week of practices that drew players from across the country and culminated with a game played at AT&T Stadium in Arlington, Texas, home of the Dallas Cowboys.

"Tournaments just kept getting bigger and bigger. It has been beneficial for me as a quarterback. My knowledge of the game has grown, mechanics have improved, and recruiting — being able to get some tape for coaches has been beneficial as well."

- Jakoby Moss, Mountain View quarterback

Players at the All-American Bowl were nominated for the event and then completed an application process in order to earn an invitation.

Players practiced and competed in full pads, which high school players from Oregon have not been able do in over

"On the very first play, I didn't have my helmet strapped up all the way so on the tackle my helmet got jammed up my nose, so that kind of hurt," Emery said.

"But it felt great being back in pads. I was really, really excited and the hits weren't that bad."

Playing on a team of freshmen and sophomores mostly from Colorado and Missouri — Emery experienced the challenges of developing a functioning offense in just a couple of days.

Those challenges were exacerbated when a tight end had to move to center because some linemen could not make the trip due to COVID-19.

"In this game I was running for my life," Emery said. "I only had time for really three pocket passes because of how fast people were getting to me. By the time I would get the ball there would be a dude in my face. That was the big difference from 7-on-7. You have four seconds when you snap it in 7-on-7, where here I probably had less than a second."

The fate of high school football remains hanging in the balance just four days before the scheduled Monday starting date.

The hope remains that efforts through the never-ending offseason culminate in a return of tackle football.

"Right now there is all this work that we have done but we don't know if it is going to pay off with getting that season," Moss said. "Me and the guys, we want our work to pay off." Reporter: 541-383-0307, brathbone@ bendbulletin.com

Waldron

Waldron, who was announced as Seattle's new offensive coordinator last week, is being given his first chance at running an NFL offense after spending time previously in New England, Washington and most recently as the pass game coordinator with the Los Angeles Rams.

But the philosophy Waldron laid out in his first comments since getting the job seemed to mirror much of what Carroll said he was seeking following a season during which Seattle set a franchise record for points scored but sputtered offensively over the second half of the year. The Seahawks fired Brian Schottenheimer after the season due to "philosophical differences" between himself and Carroll.

Waldron wants balance. He wants to protect the football. He believes in teaching funda-

And he doesn't want the offense to be labeled as conser-

"I think the great part about Russell Wilson within this system is he does have an ability to do a lot of different things," Waldron said. "Just because I'm saying that it's a balanced attack doesn't mean that that's a conservative attack. I don't ever want to get that confused."

In announcing Waldron's hiring, Carroll called him a "must get." He had been linked with previous offensive coordinator openings in the past, but Seattle provided Waldron a chance to stay in a division he knows well and move closer to home. He grew up in Portland, Oregon.

Waldron said he had no re-lationship with Carroll prior to begin contacted for an interview by the Seahawks. Waldron also noted he had discussions with Wilson during the interview process and has had subsequent talks with his quarterback since his hiring.

"The starting point for him and I was just trying to build that relationship. See how we would interact together," Waldron said. "When you're able to sit there and have conversations that are natural and fluid, and talk about everything and not just football, I think that's a great foundation for where this relationship can go."

"I've talked to Pete a bunch about this throughout the process. He has my back, fully supportive with what I want to do and what direction we want to take this thing together. So it will be a situation where I feel like I'm walking into a great scenario, with a bunch of great coaches that have such a solid foundation."

- Shane Waldron, Seahawks offensive coordinator

Along with Waldron's hiring came the addition of Andy Dickerson as Seattle's new rungame coordinator. Dickerson spent the past nine seasons with the Rams and was a college teammate of Waldron's at Tufts University in the early

It became a package deal when Carroll asked Waldron what would help him make the transition to the Seahawks.

"My first thought was Andy, and then it timed up with the way everything worked out," Waldron said. "He'll be able to come on board as the run game coordinator, and he'll be instrumental in helping with the transition and really a chance to blend with (offensive line coach) Mike (Solari) and get things all connected and marry everything that we want to do together philosophically."
