"The confidence, when you beat everybody, is just great," Medvedev said, "because I think people start maybe to be a little bit scared about you."

Another reason to watch: These guys play similar styles.

"When he's in the zone he doesn't miss. He goes down the line, cross, forehand, backhand. He doesn't miss. That's what is the most, the toughest, part of playing against him," Medvedev said. "I think that's where I should be good, also."

That's how Medvedev produced the shot of the day — week? tournament? year?

longer? — against Tsitsipas, ranging wide of the deuce court's doubles alley for a forehand return of serve, before with his feet at an awkward angle and producing a down-theline backhand passing winner that was simply spectacular. He marked the moment with a yell, then raised his arms overhead and did a bit of a hand dance, getting a crowd that had been pulling for his opponent to shower him with praise. "I wanted them to recognize me, I would say," Medvedev explained, "because the shot was unbelievable."

Djokovic's been doing that sort of thing for years.

And now that he's declared himself pain-free after hurting an abdominal muscle in his third-round victory — he initially declared it was torn — his full-on elasticity appears to be back at its best.

"It's probably the purest form of hockey, being outdoors and obviously the elements and the wind and the sun comes into play. It's going to be a lot of fun.

The Golden Knights practiced first, with DeBoer holding a traditional session before giving his players some 3-on-3 time to mimic what it was like playing outdoors as kids with their friends.

The players spent the practice day getting used to the elements. The ice was in good shape for an outdoor rink but is "stickier" and will play slower than a traditional indoor setting, especially if the sun is shining like it was Friday. The bigger issues could be the glare from the sun, wind and an elevation of more than 6,000 feet above sea level.

Then there are the distractions of the scenery.

"During the game, I'm sure everyone will be pretty locked in," Vegas forward Reilly Smith said. "The key to the game will be to try to keep things simple and not stare at the moun-

Before the Avalanche and Golden Knights take the ice for the first game at Tahoe on Saturday, the Philadelphia Flyers and Boston Bruins will get a chance to practice on the rink before their game Sunday.

Bruins forward Brad Marchand said the outdoor setting reminds him of growing up in Nova Scotia, where there was a pond behind his house that became his winter staking rink.

"It'd be pretty special when it would rain and the entire lake could be frozen, but there'd be no snow on it," he said.

Flyers forward James Van Riemsdyk is a veteran of the outdoor games, having played in six of the 30 the NHL has held to date. He said playing his first one at Fenway Park with the Flyers in 2010 and then at the Big House at the University of Michigan four years later with Toronto stand out.

But this version will be completely different.

"I think the scenery should be pretty cool," he said. "Usually these events are at stadiums and stuff like that. I know for this one, being on the golf course there will be way different and a totally different vibe in that sense. That'll make this one special and definitely memorable."

But he also suffered the hardluck loss, just the second of his college career. It was an unjust present on his 22nd birthday.

The Beavers' offense finally came alive after Wicks left the game, as pinch-hitter Preston Jones hit a two-out triple to right center and, two pitches later, Ryan Ober crushed a two-run home run to left to trim the Wildcats' lead to 3-2.

Claunch opened the ninth with a single to right, but the next three batters went down in order as the Beavers lost on opening day for the first time in 12 years.

Next up: Oregon State continues play in the Sanderson Ford College Baseball Classic on Saturday, when it faces New Mexico at 11 a.m. Left-hander Cooper Hjerpe is scheduled to start.
