Hamilcar Rashed Jr., Jermar Jefferson among 4 Beavers who will perform Thursday at pro day — Oregon State's four NFL draft-eligible players will participate in the school's pro day at 1 p.m. Thursday. OSU is playing host to representatives from 32 NFL teams as they watch running back Jermar Jefferson, outside linebacker Hamilcar Rashed Jr. and cornerbacks Nahshon Wright and Isaiah Dunn go through a series of agility, strength and speed drills. Oregon State is one of eight schools holding a pro day Thursday. Without a traditional NFL Combine this year, NFL teams are heavily relying on pro days throughout the country. Oregon's pro day is on Friday. Oregon State's pro day is not televised e, though there will be video of some drills shown at a later day on NFL Network and Pac-12 Network.

49ers sign WR Mohamed Sanu to 1-vear deal — The San Francisco 49ers have signed wide receiver Mohamed Sanu for a second stint with the team. The Niners said Tuesday they reached a one-year deal with Sanu. Sanu played three games for San Francisco last season with one catch for nine yards. Sanu was originally drafted by Cincinnati in the third round of the 2012 draft. He spent four seasons with Cincinnati and then three-plus seasons with Atlanta before being traded to New England during the 2019 season. He played with San Francisco and Detroit in 2020. Sanu has experience in coach Kyle Shanahan's system after having played for him on the Falcons in 2016.

Raised fists, kneeling during anthem OK at U.S. Olympic trials — The U.S. Olympic and Paralympic Committee will not sanction athletes for raising their fists or kneeling during the national anthem at Olympic trials, previewing a contentious policy it expects to stick to when many of those same athletes head to Tokyo this summer. The USOPC released a nine-page document Tuesday to offer guidance about the sort of "racial and social demonstrations" that will and won't be allowed by the hundreds who will compete in coming months for spots on the U.S. team. The document comes three months after the federation, heeding calls from its athletes, determined it would not enforce longstanding rules that ban protests at the Olympics.

Dapper Labs, creators of NBA Top Shot, get $305M in funding — Canadian blockchain technology company Dapper Labs has secured $305 million in private funding — some of it from current and former NBA players, including Michael Jordan — to scale up its virtual NBA trading card site, the company said Tuesday. Vancouver, British Columbia-based Dapper says NBA Top Shot has rung up $500 million in sales and registered more than 800,000 accounts since its public beta testing phase began in October. The virtual cards come in the form of a floating digital cube that includes a video highlight of an NBA player and come with a non-fungible token, backed by blockchain technology, certifying its authenticity and scarcity. -Bulletin wire reports

Rapinoe

"Knowing what it feels like to lose in a final and have that sort of gutted feeling, it's terrible," Rapinoe said during a phone interview Friday. "So, I always want to win championships and win trophies. That's the reason I play and the ultimate goal in playing sport. ... I'm looking forward to trying that again this year."

Rapinoe, who helped the Reign win the 2014 and 2015 NWSL Shield for best regular-season record, last played for the Reign in a semifinal defeat against eventual NWSL champion North Carolina Courage in October 2019.

Soccer became secondary in March 2020 when the COVID-19 pandemic momentarily shut down all sports. Rapinoe was with her USWNT, wearing her jersey inside-out in protest of USSF as the team won the SheBelieves Cup final against Japan at Toyota Stadium in Frisco, Texas.

"We were thinking out loud that we can't believe we have fans in the stadium," Rapinoe said of the 19,096 in attendance. She had a goal and assist in the match, stating Washington was at the forefront of her mind since it was the epicenter of the virus at that time.

"We pretty much knew after leaving that tournament that we were not going to be in normal life," Rapinoe said. "I even said to people 'Go wherever you want to go and be for a long time. If that's not to your NWSL market and you want to go home or wherever it is, you should go there instead of back to where you're supposed to go."

Rapinoe headed to Connecticut with fiance Sue Bird, a four-time WNBA champion and gold medalist. The couple strictly followed CDC and local government health guidelines to guard against the disease, while Rapinoe opted out of all soccer competitions and trainings.

(Opting out was) difficult in terms of not being able to be there with my team and not being able to participate," said Rapinoe, who's still judicious in her activ-ity amid the pandemic. "I didn't feel comfortable at all. ... I took that time to work on other things physically and be able to come back for 2021 where I feel like I know a lot more about how to keep myself safe. We learned a lot about bubbling our secure environments and how to keep people safe in those environments."

But, while she was away from the pitch in 2020, Rapinoe didn't disappear. She used the time away from sports to promote social justice, encourage voter turnout, fight for gender equality and civil rights for the LGBTQIA+ community.

And there was no better year for Rapinoe to use her megawatt platform than 2020. She was a host for the ESPYs with Bird and Seahawks quarterback Russell Wilson in June and also was part of the #ShareTheMicNow campaign in June, where white women with star power such as Rapinoe turned their social media accounts over to Black women to amplify their voices. Rapinoe also filmed an HBO special that was released in August where she and a panel that included Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez dug into social injustices and the presidential election.

In October, Rapinoe witnessed Bird win her fourth title, and the couple got engaged later that month. November was marked by more campaigning for people to vote and the release of her memoir, "One Life." In January, Rapinoe was among the activists helping to push Georgia blue in the Senate runoff. And earlier this month, Rapinoe joined Bird to volunteer at a vaccination site at Lumen Field followed by the trip to the White House.

While the Reign will begin its season April 16 at Cheney Stadium against the defending champion Houston Dash, Rapinoe isn't expected to make her return to NWSL action until April 21 for the Casca-dia derby against the Portland Thorns at Providence Park.

But while she has returned to sports, the pandemic still weighs on Rapinoe.

"It's almost like the degree of how terrible it is, is not really fully hitting us," Rapinoe said of the approximately 549,000 COVID-19 deaths in America. "It's become a way of life to have all of these people getting COVID, to have all of these people dying. To have the devastation that we have has almost become normal."

It's another issue she hopes to fight this time from the soccer field.

"Last year, I was completely unessential in pretty much every way," Rapinoe said. "It was like how can I be a contributing member in this society? I'm going to stay home and then I'm going to try to provide some fun, light entertainment for some people whether it's 'A Touch More' (Instagram Live with Bird) or it's talk to politicians about things that I was struggling to understand and I know other people were.

"I like to do whatever I can to help (and now) playing will be extremely impactful."
