State's top court floats redistricting extension

SALEM — The Oregon Supreme Court has floated a plan that would give state lawmakers an extension on a deadline to redraw electoral boundaries because of pandemic-related delays in U.S. Census data.

House Speaker Tina Kotek and Senate President Peter Courtney earlier this month asked the state's high court to extend the Legislature's redistricting deadline, but Secretary of State Shemia Fagan has said the new electoral map can be redrawn without the delay and remain fair and equitable. The current deadline, set by the Oregon Constitution, is July 1.

The high court's proposal, which was laid out in court filings last week, was first reported by Oregon Public Broadcasting.

Under the tentative plan, lawmakers would have until Oct. 15 to redraw legislative districts, giving them some time to analyze Census data and complete new boundaries for Oregon's 60 House districts and 30 Senate districts. The data is expected to be released by the federal government on Sept. 30, so lawmakers would still only have a few weeks to complete the task.

Oregon's leaders have been struggling to figure out how to do the weighty political job of redistricting in a year when data delays are upending hard constitutional dates.

Complicating the process is disagreement among Democratic elected officials over whether it's even necessary to wait for the updated Census data to do the job properly. The Legislature named Fagan as a defendant in a lawsuit earlier this month and asked the Supreme Court for three extra months to complete redistricting.

But Fagan, who will inherit the job of redrawing the maps if lawmakers fail to pass a redistricting plan, is worried that pushing back redistricting would require huge changes in the timeline of the 2022 primary election. In an answer to the Legislature's lawsuit, the secretary said that lawmakers didn't need to wait until census data arrived to redraw districts.

She argues that the Population Research Center at Portland State University has accurate enough population data to allow the Legislature to draw districts that have equal enough populations to pass legal muster. Under Fagan's proposed plan, lawmakers would use that data to complete maps by July 1.

If they later needed to be rejiggered, she said, there would be time to do so.

The Supreme Court's proposed schedule is something of a middle ground between the two proposals.

Under the court's proposed schedule, Fagan would have a week — as opposed to six weeks under the state constitution — to draw maps if the Legislature fails to do so. She says such a short time frame might require her to "conduct public hearings and create her own redistricting map at virtually the same time as the Legislative Assembly is conducting public hearings and deliberating its own redistricting plan."

This is likely to create public confusion," the filing said.

The Oregon Supreme Court has not yet formally concluded that it even has authority to alter constitutional deadlines, let alone what those altered deadlines will be. According to a spokesman for the court, there is no specific time frame for justices to reach a decision.

Deschutes County expands eligibility for vaccinations

Deschutes County has expanded eligibility for COVID-19 vaccinations to anyone who is identified as a frontline worker, those over age 16 with multiple underlying health conditions and anyone living in multigenerational homes.

The county is one of 20 approved by the Oregon Health Authority approved on Wednesday allowing them to offer vaccinations to expanded groups. were also given approval, according to a statement provided by state health officials.

Starting March 31, anyone fitting in this Phase 1B, Group 7 can preregister by going to www.centraloregoncovidvaccine.com. Those who sign up will be contacted when it's time to schedule a vaccine appointment. Appointments will be good for next week when a new shipment arrives, according to the county's statement.

This group puts the county ahead of the state's schedule. Appointments are sent out in staggered intervals throughout the week. The preregistration system allows appointments to be prioritized based on Oregon Health Authority eligibility guidance.

In addition, some pharmacies in Central Oregon are offering the COVID-19 vaccine to eligible groups through the Federal Retail Pharmacy Program. There will not be enough vaccines to vaccinate all eligible Oregonians at these locations due to the limited supply, but appointment availability changes frequently. Appointments may be available by visiting vaccinefinder.org.

Douglas was assigned a public defender. His plea hearing is scheduled for April 12.

Redmond man gets 4 years in prison for child porn

A Redmond man was sentenced this week to nearly four ears in prison for having nu merous images of child pornography.

Joshua Shipman, 45, was arrested in August 2019 after the Deschutes County Sheriff's Office received a tip from the National Center for Missing or Exploited Children.

A grand jury originally charged Shipman with 19 counts of encouraging child sex abuse.

Through a search warrant, police officers read exchanges Shipman had online with a Coquille woman about sexually abusing children. The conversations were described as "incredibly graphic" in the sentencing memo from the state, which sought a sentence of 45 months in prison for Shipman.

"The two spoke about their desire to sexually abuse children and discussed times they have abused children," wrote Deschutes County Deputy District Attorney Matt Nelson. In February, Shipman pleaded guilty to three counts of first-degree encouraging child sex abuse. He was sentenced Tuesday in Deschutes County Circuit Court to 45 months in prison to be followed by three years postprison supervision.

The woman Shipman wrote to, Patricia Anne Mueth, 34, was arrested and charged with seven criminal counts for allegedly sexually abusing a young relative and a dog and filming the alleged abuse. That case in Coos County remains

Man gets 30 years in shooting of former Rogue River fire chief

Associated Press

ROSEBURG - A man accused of crimes spanning four states that culminated with an attempted murder in Oregon has been sentenced to 30 years in prison and will be extradited to Colorado to face a murder charge there, authorities said.

Matthew Anthony Fanelli, 32, was sentenced Monday for a 2019 attack in which officials say he shot a former fire chief multiple times and pistol-whipped the man's girlfriend in a bid to steal their car.

Fanelli has been held in a county jail in rural Southern Oregon since his arrest two years ago. Authorities said he is accused of crimes in other states including the slaying of an Uber driver in Denver, robberies in Wyoming and Utah and a gun battle on Interstate 5 in Southern Oregon after Former Rogue River Fire Chief Mike Hannan, who was shot multiple times at close range, spoke at the sentencing hearing. He required several surgeries and still has a bullet lodged in his pelvis, the newspaper reported.

I don't believe this person is going to do anything differently than he's been doing. He shows utter disregard for life," Hannan said. "I call on you to do whatever you can to keep this person in custody."
