Preseason OTs eliminated, onside kick proposal tabled

BY BARRY WILNER

AP Pro Football Writer NFL owners on Wednesday approved eliminating overtime in preseason games and expanded selection of jersey numbers for receivers, backs. The league also will allow on-field officials to get certain "objective information" from the replay official and designated members of the officiating department "when clear running backs and defensive present." "I know in my opinion what subjective looks like," said Rich McKay, president of the Atlanta Falcons and longtime chairman of the powerful competition committee.

and obvious video evidence is "In this case, it's objective (information), there is a way they could assist. We have the technology, really good technology now. Let's use that technology and try to improve. I do get nervous when it goes beyond that."

During a virtual meeting, the 32 owners also tabled a proposal by the Philadelphia Eagles that a team be given two chances per game to retain possession after a score by converting a fourthand-15 play from its 25-yard line.

Some owners, general managers and coaches consider that too gimmicky, though they are eager to find a solution to the near-disappearance of the onside kick.

Owners did approve establishing a maximum number of players in the setup zone (between 10 and 25 yards from the kickoff) in hopes of enhancing onside kick opportunities.

Defending teams will be limited to nine players in that

"Special teams (committee) suggested a maximum number of people in the setup zone, and for one year only we'll try that and see what that does to the onside kick numbers," McKay said.

Also approved were ensuring enforcement of all accepted penalties committed by either team during successive extra-point attempts, and adding a loss of down for a second forward pass thrown from behind the line of scrimmage, and for a pass thrown after the ball returns behind the line.

McKay said a point of emphasis this year will be cracking down on taunting on the field. The league found too many potential incidents in

The league announced that its 2021 schedule, the first with a 17-game regular season, will be released May 12.

Portland Trail Blazers' Rondae Hollis-Jefferson, right, drives to the basket on Los Angeles Clippers' Ivica Zubac, left, on Tuesday night in Portland.

Hurting Hollis-Jefferson is that he isn't much of a shooter in an era where not being able to hit from the 3-point line (21.3%) is a detriment for a wing player. The Blazers, however, have plenty of shooting. What they need is more defense and that's what Hollis-Jefferson provides. He has been a plus defender in each of his five NBA seasons according to FiveThirtyEight.com.

"Coach Stotts told me what he wanted me to bring to the table and that's exactly what I did," Hollis-Jefferson said.

If Hollis-Jefferson continues to provide defense and energy, he could have a good chance to stick around this season. The uncertainty isn't easy to deal with for a former first-round pick who is only 26 and has made 154 career starts.

"If you would have told me three years ago that I would be in this position, I would have laughed," Hollis-Jefferson said. "Just being in this position right now, it's really tough. It's an eyeopener for me. It's humbling."

Hollis-Jefferson, who has made $9.2 million during his career, said his competitiveness and passion for the game made it tougher for him to be out of the league. Now those traits could forge his path back into it for a longer stay.

"I'm definitely grateful for the opportunity from the Portland organization, for believing in me and giving me this chance," Hollis-Jefferson said. "It means the world to me. So, every chance I get out there to play I'm definitely never going to take it for granted. Things could go back to the way they were."

The competitiveness shown on the mound by Reynolds to bounce back after hitting a couple of rough patches is what Sexson is starting to see from his young team four games into the season. Avenging an earlier season loss to the Cougars (3-1) and rallying in the final three innings was a step in the right direction for Summit (2-2).

"They lost their first game pretty handily, basically we wanted to come back and rebound after that loss," said

"When I am in my groove, I'm just not thinking. I get the sign and throw. When I am in my groove all my pitches (fastball, curveball and changeup) are working, and you just throw it to the mitt."

— Zach Reynolds, Summit pitcher

Sexson. "They are becoming competitive. You always want a young team to bounce back."

For Mountain View, which tying run for Mountain View in the sixth inning into an out. entered the game unbeaten, Tuesday's game is one they have to learn from. The Cougars had four er-

Platner struck out six on the mound and had a double to go along with his home run while Blaine Causey drove in four runs for the Cougars.

"We talked about how we overcome these games by learning from them," said Mountain View coach Ryan Johnson. "Not giving up, not getting caught up in the moment. They did a good job and we can learn from this."
