In a game that went five extra innings, where pitching and defense dominated, a soft line drive off the bat of junior Chase Terry dropped in center field and brought home Connor Zook for the winning score.

The Mountain View bench cleared to chase down the kid who finally put an end to the game that seemed as though it would never end. "I thought he was going to catch it, and then we were going to go on to the 13th inning," said Terry of his walk-off hit, the first of his high school career. "I just wanted the game to be done." Terry had a chance to deliver the game-winning hit earlier in the game, but did not come through. That left his coach a little antsy when he fell behind by two strikes, as he did earlier, in his final at bat. "I was a little nervous because he had taken two straight strikes earlier at bat," said Johnson. "Finally with two strikes he was finally able put one in play and make something happen." As was the case in the first meeting, both teams sent out their top arms. Zach Reynolds toed the rubber for Summit, ter giving up the home run, he struck out eight of the next 11 batters that he faced over the three-inning stretch. The emotion showed after his final strikeout in the sixth inning captured the intensity of the game.

"I was trying to overthrow it and that really messed me up. I just focused more and threw more strikes," said Platner, who finished with 13 strikeouts in six innings and 111 pitches. "I was happy because I didn't want anyone to score. It was just building up from the other innings." Not to be overlooked, the bullpens of both teams seized the moments as well. Mountain View's Jordan Kennedy and Declan Corrigan allowed one hit in six innings of relief, while Summit's Jake Hendricks allowed three hits in six innings out of the bullpen. Rarely do high school baseball games go as long as Tuesday night's game. It was the type of game that neither Terry nor Platner had ever played in, when a doubleheader counts as one game. "This is my first time, it was pretty crazy," said Platner. "Lot of focus, everyone had to be focused and it was just a good game. I love these games."

while the lefty Aaron Platner was on the mound for the Cougars.

And once again, the two aces delivered.

Reynolds did not allow a baserunner in the first 10 Mountain View batters he faced. It was not until the fourth inning that the Cougars had a baserunner.

Joe Vaccaro's two-out single in the fourth inning was able to drive home two runs for Mountain View to tie the game 2-2.

While Mountain View was able to get to Reynolds later in the game, the opposite was true # for Platner.

After being a little erratic early in the game and giving up a home run to Luke Bents in the fourth, the southpaw settled into a groove. Johnson had to visit the mound to try and settle down his pitcher who was trying to throw every pitch by the Summit batters with little success.

"Be around the zone and you will get the results he wants," said Johnson of what he told Platner on the mound. "He was up in the zone, we just tried to settle him down. The only one who can beat him is himself."

Platner found his zone. Af-ready moving toward.

"We wanted things based on data rather than assumptions," Berry said.

NCAA rules currently man-date at least two of 25 preseason practices be contactless and conducted without pads, Berry said, but a survey found most coaches already run about six of those leading up to the season.

He said going to nine padless practices, essentially walkthroughs, seems like a drastic change to coaches.

"To us that's kind of a giant leap," Berry said. "We'd rather take a step and then measure the results and say, 'OK, we ended up in a good place' And take another step and keep improving along those lines."

Coaches have been moving away from high-impact drills such as Bull in the Ring and the Oklahoma drill, where Reporter: 541-383-0307, brathbone@bendbulletin.com players mostly just run into each other.

"Most of our coaches aren't doing it so I don't know if it's going to move the needle much," Berry said. "But I get it."

Berry said scaling back too much on hitting in practice could lead to players not being properly prepared to protect themselves in games.

"We're fearful if we go too far in one direction we'd have a lot of injuries in that first game," Berry said. "There is a process, a teaching progression to get players to learn how to control their bodies."

The final proposal could look different than the 9-8-8 model, but changes are likely to be small tweaks, Lyons said.

"I think the balance is there," Lyons said. "Do I think there's enough there to teach and work through it? I think the answer is yes."

Lyons refers to the model as 9-8-8: eight days of players practicing in helmets and shoulder pads with no live tackling to the ground, nine days in just helmets and no more than eight full-contact davs. The current proposal would also limit full-contact practices to no more than two consecutive days.

"We're trying to provide as much flexibility within the model as possible and not dictate what days they get to do what, and give each coach the ability to coach how they want to," Lyons said. "But then also limit the number of contacts that we currently have from a direct hit, head-to-head contacts that you currently have in practices."

During live-tackling practices, no more than 90 minutes of full contact will be permitted under the initial proposal. "What I'm hearing, a lot of coaches aren't using 90 minutes so we may look and say, 'Is that 75 minutes?" Lyons said.

The study found that 48.5% of the concussions recorded occurred during August training camp. The teams involved in the study were Virginia Tech, North Carolina, Wisconsin, UCLA, Air Force and Army.

Todd Berry, executive director of the American Football Coaches' Association, said there was some concern among coaches that Army and Air Force awould skew the study data. The two academies play a run-heavy, triple-option offense that can lend itself to more contact, he said.

Overall, though, Berry said the study is helping guide changes many coaches were al-
