

Israel increasingly divides Biden, Democrats

BY SEAN SULLIVAN AND ANNE GEARAN
The Washington Post

DEARBORN, Mich. — President Joe Biden is increasingly coming into conflict with fellow Democrats as he resists a shift in his party toward a tougher stand on Israel and stronger support for the Palestinians, a disconnect highlighted Tuesday by Biden's visit to a region that is a center of Arab American life in the United States.

Biden traveled to the Detroit area to tour an electric vehicle plant and promote his infrastructure plan, an effort to bolster his domestic agenda at a moment of deadly conflict in the Middle East. Arab American protesters gathered at a mosque in Dearborn in advance of the visit, eager to demonstrate their anger at Biden's approach to the conflict.

The president faced calls from at least one member of Congress to devote time during Tuesday's trip to meeting with Arab Americans because the plant Biden visited is in an area that is 90 percent Arab American. But the White House announced no such meetings.

Many Democrats remain staunchly supportive of Israel and the actions it says it must take in self-defense. But as a growing number of Democrats urged a cease-fire over the past week, Biden for days refused to join them, waiting until after his third conversation with Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to cautiously support such a move.

The president's top spokeswoman has repeatedly declined to say whether Israel's military response in the Gaza Strip was appropriate to the provocation, while many Democrats have not been shy about calling it disproportionate. And Biden and his advisers have stuck to an assertion that liberal Democrats reject as insufficient, the notion that Israel has a right to defend itself.

President Joe Biden arrives to speak after a tour of the Ford Rouge EV Center in Dearborn, Michigan, Tuesday.

That has led to sharp criticism of the Biden administration from some Democrats, which otherwise has been rare.

"The president needs to tell Netanyahu to stop," said Rep. Ro Khanna, D-Calif., who is part of a new generation of liberal Democrats. While Biden's cease-fire comments were a marginally positive step, Khanna said, "I think it has to be much stronger."

Khanna called on Biden to meet with Arab Americans in Michigan on Tuesday and set a deadline for Netanyahu to end his military assault in the Gaza Strip.

Biden was greeted Tuesday by local Democrats, including Rep. Rashida Tlaib, a Democrat, the first Palestinian American woman to serve in Congress and a vocal critic of his Middle East policy. The two shook hands shortly after Biden arrived at the airport and spoke for several minutes.

In his comments at a Ford auto plant, Biden addressed Tlaib and mentioned family members she has in the Middle East. "I pray that your mom and grandmom are okay on the West Bank," Biden said. "I'm going to do all I can to see that they are."

Changing Democratic attitudes have been evident across the country in recent days. Rep. Cori Bush, a freshman Missouri Democrat and Black Lives Matter activist, delivered an impassioned speech on the House floor, promising to "fight for our rights in Palestine and in Ferguson," tying the conflict in the Middle East to battles for racial justice at home.

Sen. Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., who in recent years has become one of the most prominent elected officials among liberal Democrats, penned a widely circulated op-ed lambasting the Democratic leadership for being too accommodating toward Israel. "Palestinian lives matter," he wrote in the New York Times.

Even longtime Israel hawks such as Senate Majority Leader Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y., Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Robert Menendez, D-N.J., and House Judiciary Committee Chairman

Jerrod Nadler, D-N.Y., have shown a sensitivity to the shifting winds in their party with carefully worded comments suggesting they would not always march in lockstep with the Israeli government. All three have a strong Jewish presence in their constituencies.

"It's certainly been years in the coming," said Jeremy Ben-Ami, president of J Street, a liberal, peace-oriented Jewish organization. "The Democratic Party is clearly now willing and able to speak out in a much more balanced manner about issues related to Israel."

Biden's strategy on Israel is a departure from a pattern of following his party's leftward shift on a range of other issues. With an ambitious climate change agenda, sweeping anti-poverty investments, calls to raise taxes on the wealthy and a decision to withdraw troops from Afghanistan, Biden has embraced many of the hallmarks of the modern liberal movement.

The current Israel-Hamas conflict, now in its second week, is testing Biden's ability to avoid entanglement in an area that has been volatile for decades. A focal point for past presidents, it has not drawn the same level of interest from Biden. He has not centered his global agenda in the Middle East, nor has he ambitiously spoken of bringing peace to the region as his predecessors have done.

But now, "The Middle East came back and found Joe Biden," said Aaron David Miller, a former adviser to six secretaries of state from both parties who is now a senior fellow at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

At the same time, St. Charles Bend had 43 COVID-19 patients, eight in the intensive care unit and eight on ventilators, according to the hospital's website.

Around the state, the vaccination rate is 58.9% of people 16 and older, according to the Oregon Health Authority. Lake County reported the lowest vaccination rate at 32% of those 16 and older, according to the health authority website.

Earlier this month Brown shifted the focus from case counts and hospitalizations to vaccination rates as the key measure of a county's ability to drop COVID-19 restrictions. She said when 70% of the adults 16 and older received at least one COVID-19 vaccination and there's a plan in each county to achieve vaccine equity for people in underserved communities, the state could throw the doors open to normalcy.

I salute the National Guard and the volunteers in getting out the vaccine. We just got our 2nd shot at Redmond Fairgrounds, and what a great job they're doing! I and my husband are very impressed. They are all awesome! Then we went to Jake's for breakfast, who's always awesome, and talked to a very nice young couple who I believe bought our breakfast! How great was that! Thank you very much. We don't know who you are, and have never had that happen before. It was very, very nice of you. Again, thank you. Our names are Gary and Linda.
