COVID-19 in Oregon

Judge denies businesses seeking block on COVID-19 restrictions

Associated Press

PORTLAND — A federal judge has determined that a group of businesses and political action committees that sought to block Oregon Gov. Kate Brown's COVID-19 restrictions haven't shown enough evidence to prompt such a move.

The group — which includes the Gresham restaurant Spud Monkey's Bar and Grill, its owner Melissa Adams and political action committees Oregon Moms Union and Heart of Main Street — filed a temporary restraining order against Brown on May 5. The order protested the "unfair restrictions" they said the governor had put on businesses and public school students.

Judge Karin Immergut declined to issue the restraining order, saying in a Thursday filing the group "failed to show sufficient facts and adequate legal support" to warrant a block on Brown's restrictions.
