Lawrence

This is the second Olympic trials for Lawrence, who grew up in Reno, Nevada, and moved to Bend in 2013. She reached the finals and finished eighth in the 2016 Olympic trials at Hayward.

Lawrence raced in the second of two heats on Sunday. She said she watched the first heat on television in the call room below the new stadium.

"The first heat was pretty bunched up and there was some jostling and someone fell," Lawrence said. "I think Emma Coburn saw that and she was like, alright, I'm not messing around. So she just took it out fast."

Knowing she had three days before racing again, Lawrence made the decision to try to stay with Coburn and Falland and punch her ticket to the finals with a top-five finish in the heat. She ran in third position for most of the race and finished that way, with a sizable gap behind her to the fourth runner.

"The last two laps I was looking at the jumbotron and I could see I had a good amount of space, so I kind of backed off, especially on the last lap," Lawrence said.

Calkins

"Couldn't be more excited about this group going forward," Mariners manager Scott Servais said. "We're playing on top of our game right now. It's really fun to watch the young players' confidence grow, and what they can do and the excitement they bring. Hopefully our fans are enjoying it."

They're certainly enjoying the results. The way the results are achieved might have aged each fan 10 years, but they're enjoying them. In games decided by two runs or less this season, the Mariners are 21-15.

In games decided by one run, the Mariners are 16-6. That's how they've managed to be two games over .500 despite having allowed 46 more runs than they've scored.

Doesn't hurt that the bullpen has been scorching. Just once — in the ninth Saturday against the Rays — have the M's given up a run in the eighth or ninth inning in any of their past seven wins. Paul Sewald has gone nine straight appearances without giving up a run. Drew Steckenrider hasn't allowed a run in 12 of his past 13 appearances, including his last seven. The two blanked the Rays in the eighth and ninth, respectively, on Sunday, with Sewald fanning two and Steckenrider striking out the side.

Doesn't hurt that the young talent is starting to prosper. Shortstop J.P. Crawford, 26, leads the team in Wins Above Replacement (2.3) and has watched his slugging percentage jump from .330 at the start of the month to .404 currently. After struggling mightily in his first two starts, 24-year-old pitcher Logan Gilbert has gone at least five innings in his past four starts, at least six innings in two of his past four starts, and has watched his team win in each of his past five appearances.

Doesn't hurt that their ace seemed to rediscover his form Sunday, either. Even before the forearm strain that sidelined him for all of May, Marco Gonzales had been struggling for the M's. He came into Sunday's game with an ERA of 5.44, but ended up throwing 6 1/3 innings vs. the Rays while giving up just two runs. His striking out Austin Meadows to end the sixth with two on might have been the play of the game before Long's 10th-inning heroics. If he keeps churning out performances like that, this team has a chance come September.

"I felt like I finally had the fastball command that I've been after," Gonzales said. "Besides a couple pitches, I really felt confident in a lot of at-bats against these guys."

The race marked her first time competing at the new Hayward Field, which she called "amazing." Though she admitted she did not really take it all in because she was so focused on advancing to Thursday's finals.

"Once I got out there, I felt like I hardly looked up," Lawrence said.

In addition to her teammates on Littlewing, Lawrence has her husband and sister at Hayward to cheer her on.

She said she enjoyed being able to race in front of a crowd again, even at limited capacity due to the pandemic.

"We haven't had that at all, and Eugene is such a track town," Lawrence said. "A lot of people in the stands are more family and coaches, but it was really cool."

The women's steeplechase final is scheduled for 8:47 p.m. Thursday and will air live on NBC Sports Northwest.
