

Police shoot, kill man in Portland

The Associated Press
PORTLAND — Authorities say a Portland police officer shot and killed a man outside a motel near the Oregon Convention Center.
 Police initially were called to the Motel 6 on Thursday night. Dispatch reports indicate the first two officers were at the motel about 7:15 p.m. Portland Fire & Rescue emergency medics also were at the scene when the shooting occurred.
 Police described the man as a white adult. They said they went to the motel for a welfare check but released few details.
 The man appeared to have a weapon in his hand, Kalli Temple, who lives across the street from the motel and watched the scene unfold from her window, told The Oregonian. Police approached him and looked as if they were trying to get him to drop it, she said.

 But he ran from them, Temple said.
 An officer then shot the man from about 8 to 12 feet away, she said. Temple said it appeared the man had been having a mental health crisis.
 The officer who shot him was placed on paid administrative leave, which is standard practice, as police and prosecutors investigate.
 Police said they would release the name of the man who was killed after the medical examiner confirms his identity and officers notify his family.

Heat

 Medical centers and hospitals have stocked up on cooling hydration solutions, he said. But at St. Charles, which has been full of patients lately, there could be long waits. At 1 a.m. Friday, Ansbrough said the emergency department had 55 people in the waiting room. The hospital has 32 beds in the emergency department.
 “The hospital is full, and we do have some anxiety about the heat and travel and the holiday weekend coming up,” Ansbrough said. “We’ll care for people as quickly as we can, but there will be a wait.”
 Even Fido should be protected from the heat, according to the Humane Society of Central Oregon. Pets should be kept inside away from the heat and from direct sun. Keep them cool and have lots of water available, said Lynne Ouchida, community outreach manager.
 Meanwhile, homeless advocates, churches and medical centers are collaborating to provide cooling sites for people to take shelter in.
 “Right now we’re reaching out to the community,” said Dr. Kim Montee at Mosaic Medical. “I don’t remember ever seeing a temperature over 103, and I grew up in Madras.”
 Montee said anyone spending a lot of time outdoors should be mindful of sweating. Avoid being out directly in the sun, but if there’s no choice, wear lightweight and light-colored clothing. Drink lots of water.
 The Oregon Health Authority says to be on the lookout for excessive sweating, drenching of clothes, Montee said. That’s a sign of heat exhaustion, which is a step away from heatstroke, which can cause death. The signs of heat exhaustion are feeling faint or dizzy, excessive sweating, rapid or weak pulse, nausea or vomiting, cool, clammy skin or muscle cramps.
 “As the body attempts to cool itself, it will sweat,” he said. “So it’s the body’s way of

Supplies needed

Pandemic Partners and the First Presbyterian Church in Bend are collecting resources during the heat wave. Sign up is on Facebook. Items needed include sunscreen, water, Gatorade, clothing, tarps and lip balm with sunscreen. The church, at 230 NE Ninth St. in Bend will be open for cooling respite over the weekend. Weekdays Shepherd’s House, 275 NE Second St., in Bend, will open as a cooling shelter.

dealing with the heat and potentially the first indication of heat exhaustion.”
 The signs of heatstroke are more severe: throbbing headache, confusion, loss of consciousness, rapid, strong pulse, nausea or vomiting, a body temperature above 103 degrees Fahrenheit, red, hot skin and not sweating.
 “It’s imperative to stay properly hydrated,” said Dr. Rebecca Ferguson, from Summit Health in Bend. “Aim to drink at least half an ounce of water for each pound you weigh.”
 “Drinking lots of water — even if you don’t feel thirsty — can stave off heat exhaustion, and its potentially fatal cousin, heatstroke.”
 Morgan Schmidt, a pastor at First Presbyterian Church in Bend, said the community is ramping up its efforts to help those who don’t have a place to stay cool.
 “There’s not many places to seek refuge from the heat right now, but a lot of people are working on it,” Schmidt said. “There’s a lot of collaboration. The community is coming together to offer relief to our most vulnerable neighbors, those who live outside in the midst of this unprecedented heatwave.”
 The church is offering a low barrier to anyone who needs to seek shelter from the heat. There will be food, and water and cool air from air conditioners.

Governor tells Japanese diplomat escaped inmate to be held accountable in attack

BY NOELLE CROMBIE
 The Oregonian

In a letter to Japan’s top diplomat in Oregon, Gov. Kate Brown this week expressed sadness and concern over the attacks of two Japanese citizens, allegedly by an inmate who escaped from a prison work site in Washington County in April.

Brown’s letter, dated Tuesday, was addressed to Consul General Masaki Shiga of the Consular Office of Japan.

Shiga wrote a frank letter to Brown on April 30, two weeks after the attack, asking for support for the victims, questioning how the state Department of Corrections allowed Jedaiah Lunn, a 14-time felon, to slip away from a worksite and warning of economic consequences as a result.

Shiga told Brown the shocking incident has prompted Japanese residents in Oregon — about 9,000 people — to reconsider their safety. The state is also a draw for Japanese tourists. According to Travel

Randy L. Rasmussen/The Oregonian

Jedaiah Lunn was housed at the South Fork Forest Camp in Tillamook and was on a work crew at a Washington County campground when he allegedly walked off and beat two Japanese women.

Oregon, the state saw an estimated 73,000 visitors from Japan in 2019 who spent about $80 million.

Brown responded by assuring Shiga that Oregon values its ties with Japan “and its citizens who choose to visit or decide to make their homes here — a relationship based on mutual respect, cultural appreciation, and strong partnerships.”

 The governor stood by South Fork Forest Camp, the facility where Lunn was housed at the time he walked away. The Department of Corrections and the Oregon Board of Forestry have operated the minimum-security prison outside of Tillamook since 1951.

The program offers several work opportunities, including firefighting, which Brown told Shiga “has provided a tremendous benefit to the state in terms of wildfire preparedness, firefighting, and wildfire recovery.”

Brown said the program “largely been successful” and added that “this horrific incident is a detriment to its longstanding success.”

“To that end,” she said the Department of Corrections and the Department of Forestry are conducting “an administrative review to examine what occurred, determine what lessons can be learned, and potentially implement changes to ensure the program’s success in the future.”

Pandemic

Brown said the end of state mandates and the dismantling of the four-tier risk level system would be a welcome change for residents.

But she warned that the health crisis for the state is not over with so many people not able or willing to be vaccinated.

“Some 98% of people dying from COVID-19 are unvaccinated,” Brown said.

Oregon Health Authority Director Pat Allen said that with the lifting of restrictions, management of the pandemic response will shift to local governments.

Since Brown announced a state of emergency in March 2020, the governor has been the arbiter of what restrictions would be put in place and where. Many Republicans have criticized Brown for political overreach and damaging the state economy with early forced shutdowns and later often changing limits.

But Brown has pointed to Oregon’s relative success in keeping COVID-19 infections and deaths well below nearly all states.

In place of Brown’s orders, county commissioners will decide public health actions, and the state will only compile statistics and offer assistance.

“Local officials will be responsible for those decisions and for the consequences,” Allen said.

Allen warned that areas with high numbers of unvaccinated residents were “dry tinder” for a blaze of virus outbreaks.

Decisions on schools will also shift to local leaders.

Oregon policy intends to have “full-time, in person instruction,” said Colt Gill, director of the Oregon Department of Education.

New guidance to schools will be sent by June 30 and will include summer-school recommendations.

Allen said the June 30 shift is an attempt to handle COVID-19 within the protocols for other health policies.

Health officials are given the maximum amount of responsibility. But it is not a blanket removal of state authority if things go awry.

“Nothing is off the table,” he said

Brown said she believed the new system will work and add flexibility instead of a one-way approach across all 36 counties.

But she did not rule out statewide emergency orders if the virus makes a widespread resurgence.

“We obviously don’t know what the future holds,” she said.
