Tour de France drops lawsuit against spectator; Cavendish gets 50th Grand Tour stage win — The Tour de France has dropped its lawsuit against a 30-year-old spectator who caused a crash during Stage 1 of the race last Saturday. With about 30 miles remaining in the first leg of the race, the woman stepped into the road and held up a sign for the TV cameras as the peloton approached. She did not get out of the way fast enough and German cyclist Tony Martin clipped the sign and fell, causing a chain reaction crash and massive pileup. Race organizers announced plans to file a lawsuit against her. Police arrested the woman Wednesday, but on Thursday Tour officials dropped their lawsuit. On Thursday, Mark Cavendish, the Tour's sprint points leader, earned his second stage win of the week and 50th of his career in a Grand Tour in the sixth stage of the Tour. Finishing second was Jasper Philipsen and in third was Nacer Bouhanni. There were no major changes among the general classification contenders.

TENNIS

Federer, Gauff, Barty advance at Wimbledon — Despite a few early wobbles, American teen Coco Gauff defeated 34-year-old Elena Vesnina 6-4, 6-3 in the second round of Wimbledon on Thursday. Also on the women's side, topseeded Ashleigh Barty beat Anna Blinkova by the same score. On the men's side, No. 6 Roger Federer had little trouble in dispatching of Frenchman Richard Gasquet 7-6 (1), 6-1, 6-4. In an all-American battle, 31st seed Taylor Fritz outlasted Steve Johnson in five sets, 6-4, 7-6 (4), 4-6, 6-7 (4), 6-4.

Davis Thompson ahead at Rocket Mortgage Classic

— Davis Thompson, in his third PGA Tour event as a professional, is leading the Rocket Mortgage Classic. Thompson matched a Detroit Golf Club record with a 9-under 63 to take the early first-round lead. Brandon Hagy, Joaquin Niemann and Tom Lewis were two shots back.

"The biggest thing is you are able to recognize when you are distracted," said assistant coach Joey Wong. "That is the whole point of it.

The mental preparation game is a trick of the trade that Nobach, Graham and Wong — all former Oregon State baseball players — picked up during their playing days. Nobach said he and more than 20 of his OSU teammates would meditate daily while playing for the Beavers, a routine he has continued into his coaching career.

Wong and Graham were in professional baseball working with performance coaches such as Alan Jaeger and Andy McKay (currently the director of player development with the Seattle Mariners) when they picked it up.

NOTE: Three points for victory, one point for tie.

"I wish I started doing it when I was these kids' age," Wong said. "I didn't start until 2015 when I was with the Rockies playing pro ball. I was pretty stagnant and looking for an edge. It helped me refocus, helped me be more present and address the thoughts in my

During a home series with the Ridgefield Raptors, the Elks brought in Collin Henderson, author of "Master vour Mindset," to teach the current players about how the mind is a more powerful tool than the body.

When lying on the turf, Gordon — who struck out a season-high 11 batters Tuesday in the Elks series-opening win against the Corvallis Knights — plays out the game he is about to play in his head.

At times, everything is going well and all his pitches are strikes. Then he plays through the rough patches in the game, when runners are on base and he needs to be at his best.

"Every game scenario I can think of," Gordon said. "That way when I take the mound I've already lived through them once." Perhaps it is the meditation, but since starting that pregame routine during a home series against Ridgefield in mid-June, the Elks have become one of the hottest teams in the West Coast League.

After starting the season off winning just one of their first 10 WCL games, the Elks have now won seven of nine games and their last four series, with series wins over the Wenatchee Applesox, the Bellingham Bells, the Cowlitz Black Bears and the league leading Corvallis Knights. The Elks took the first two games of the three game series against the Knights with a 6-5 series-clinching win Thursday afternoon in 11 innings that started Wednesday night and had to be finished Thursday afternoon.

The biggest change over that stretch, Nobach said, is the players getting more comfortable with one another and starting to buy into the program.

"When you focus on the team and you are playing for the team, the level of play is going to increase because you aren't putting pressure or anxiety on yourself," he said. "Rather you are performing for your teammates, and that takes time."

She never doubted she could do the work, even though she rarely saw women on NASCAR teams.

"It's pretty obvious when you watch on TV, you can see if there's people like you or not like you and I don't know that I had ever seen a woman on the NASCAR broadcast," Ashmore said. "But I don't think I ever really thought twice — 'Can I do this?' — because I knew I was really good at math and science and I knew I was going to be a good engineer."

At Roush, Ashmore said she was on a trajectory to become a crew chief — the top job on a NASCAR team and one that has never been filled by a woman at the Cup Series level. But she's realistic and believes

Andrea Mueller from Team Penske would be the one to reach that milestone. Ashmore gave up her when a data engineer position opened at Ganassi's open-wheel team and gave her an opportunity to move to Indianapolis and be closer to friends and family. In IndyCar, she doesn't doubt the chance may come for a woman to lead a team.

Cara Adams spent 18 years working her way through Firestone's organization and in 2019 was promoted to director of race tire engineering, development and manufacturing for IndyCar's tire supplier. Adams is credited with creating a welcoming atmosphere for women in the series and the number of females in roles outside of public relations or marketing-type jobs has steadily increased.

"If you look at (Honda Performance), they have a fair number of females and at Ganassi, we have four teams and two female engineers and two males — that's 50% and that's pretty incredible for motor sports," Ashmore said.
