Henley fires a 62 for early lead at Wyndham — Russell Henley shot an 8-under 62, his lowest round in more than two years, to take the lead Thursday in the suspended first round of the Wyndham Championship. Henley birdied three of his final four holes for a two-stroke lead over Sung Kang, Ted Potter Jr., Michael Thompson, Chris Kirk, Scott Piercy and Hudson Swafford in the PGA Tour's final regular-season event. Adam Hadwin also was 6-under, but had two holes left when darkness ended play. A storm halted play for 2 hours, 7 minutes, with 30 players unable to finish. Past champion Webb Simpson and Kevin Kisner led a group of 10 another stroke behind at 65 at Sedgefield Country Club, where many competitors are scrambling to make it into top 125 to advance to the playoffs that start next week at the Northern Trust.

“That’s something that we’ll all see in the game,” he said. “Trey says the right things, he’s a pretty good runner, he’s pretty competitive. I hope he takes my word for it. Sometimes those guys don’t believe how hard people hit until they get hit a couple of times in the NFL.”
The preseason may be more important for Lance because of how little experience he had in college. He started only 17 games at FCS-level North Dakota State and played only one game in a COVID-shortened 2020 season.

His last game with fans in the stadium came more than 19 months ago against James Madison in the FCS title game for the 2019 season.
That only adds to his level of anticipation for this game.
“Excited to go out and compete with this locker room of guys,” he said.

“Everything’s new, so just being able to get used to everything, from the hotel the night before the game to pregame warmup. Everything’s going to be new, but at the same time

Ducks

I’ve been thinking a lot about that. Wonder if Day has, too. Because in his 25 games as the acting head coach in Columbus he hasn’t been made uncomfortable in the months of September, October or November. In fact, during his tenure as head coach Ohio State has played in only one regular-season game that was decided by a touchdown or less — a seven-point win at home over Indiana last season. In that game, the Hoosiers trailed 28-7 at half and came back to make it a one-score loss.
The Buckeyes’ kicking worries? Oregon needs to make it matter on Sept. 11.
Not just because the Buckeyes have some concerns there. But because nobody really knows how Ohio State’s entire program, top to bottom, will react to seeing its season placed in jeopardy in week two against a Pac-12 opponent. There are no more moral victories for Oregon. The Ducks need to beat Ohio State. It was all over Mario Cristobal’s face at conference media day in Hollywood.
“I never lie to myself,” Cristobal told me. “I just love the way this team works. I love the way it’s coming together, the way it’s galvanizing, the way they’ve pushed each other and the way they’ve allowed us to push them. Conflict and adversity is part of football, it’s part of life.

“I’m fired up.”
When Cristobal was hired, I wrote that he’d take the Ducks to the College Football Playoff within his first five seasons. He’s sniffing around it as that marker approaches. He’s addressed his biggest early nitpick — game management — by hiring offensive (Joe Moorhead) and defensive (Tim DeRuyter) coordinators who have previously served as head coaches. Cristobal’s exes (Marcus Arroyo and Andy Avalos) had no in-game experience as a program CEO. I like that he’s been willing to make improvements.

Former Oregon offensive lineman Nick Cody reached out to me this week with an interesting point. He played a decade ago on a team that challenged Auburn for the national title under Chip Kelly. Cody pointed out that Oregon’s offensive line in that national title game would be pile driven by Cristobal’s current line. Only Mark Asper, who went 6-foot-7 and 323 pounds, could have played on the Ducks’ current offensive line.

“The guys Oregon has now,” Cody said, “would maul us over.”

I spoke to one of the new guys, center Alex Forsyth, a couple of weeks ago in person. He said that it was a blessing to play in a program that had a head coach who was a former offensive lineman himself. Forsyth told me that Cristobal always seems to find his way into the offensive-line meetings.

“We have a bunch of people who are invested in making the O-line better,” he said.

Whenever I talk to a quarterback or running back or receiver in the offseason, I ask them what play they like to see called in a game. Their eyes always dance. They don’t have to think. They blurt it out immediately. Given that Oregon’s offensive line is the face of the franchise, for the first time I asked one of the big guys up front what he likes to see called in game.

Forsyth’s eyes widened.
“I like inside zone the best,” he said. “That’s where it gets muddy and bloody. That’s fun.”
Oregon has the season opener against Fresno State. Then, it’s onto Columbus for a game we’ve all been waiting for
