SPORTS BRIEFING

BASKETBALL

Former UO women's player Nyara Sabally joins coaching staff at Sacramento State — Former Oregon women's basketball forward and 2022 first-round WNBA draft pick Nyara Sabally is joining the coaching staff at Sacramento State. Sabally will work under coach Mark Campbell, formerly of UO, who announced the addition of the No. 5 pick of last year's WNBA draft to his staff on Tuesday. "We are thrilled to add Nyara to our program," Campbell said in a statement. "She is like family to our entire coaching staff and will have a major impact working with our current players." Campbell and associate head coach Xavier Lopez were on Oregon's coaching staff for Sabally's first three years at UO. She was also teammates with Sac State assistant coach Minyon Moore in 2019-20. "I am very grateful for this amazing opportunity to join the Sacramento State coaching staff," Sabally said in a statement." Sabally is missing this season in the WNBA due to injury.

CYCLING

Nielsen wins 10th stage that was interrupted by climate protest — Magnus Cort Nielsen won a two-man sprint in a photo finish to claim the 10th stage of the Tour de France on Tuesday at the end of a hilly trek in the Alps that was interrupted by protesters. It was Cort Nielsen's second stage win at cycling's biggest race after his maiden success in the medieval city of Carcassonne four years ago. The Danish rider pipped Nick Schultz to the line by a few inches at the end of the long and exhausting climb to the Megeve ski resort after Luis Leon Sanchez, who ended third, launched the sprint. Two-time defending champion Tadej Pogacar rode among a group of general contenders, and he kept the race lead. Wednesday's Stage 11 features two legendary Tour passes — the Col du Télégraphe and the Col du Galibier, before a mountaintop finish at the Col du Granon. Tuesday's stage was briefly neutralized with 35 kilometers left after a group of seven activists protesting climate change sat on the road and lit flares, forcing riders to stop for 12 minutes.

HOCKEY

NHL defenseman Duncan Keith announces retirement — Family brought Duncan Keith to Edmonton after a stellar run as the backbone of the Chicago Blackhawks' defense. And following a season with the Oilers, family is why Keith feels he's in a good place to end his NHL career after 17 seasons, three Stanley Cups and two Norris Trophy awards as the league's top defenseman. Keith announced his retirement Tuesday, thanking teammates, coaches and family members for helping him along the way of his Hall of Fame-caliber career. Keith will turn 39 on Saturday, and said there's a noticeable change in how he's felt in recent postseasons. That, coupled with the desire to spend more time with his son Colton, helped him reach a difficult decision.

It proved useful ahead of the USA Track & Field Outdoor Championships, where she finished in third place in the steeplechase. Frerichs is set to complete her master's program in the spring of 2023, but her ambitions with education will likely carry her further, she said. Britain's Mo Farah poses with his gold medal in the men's 10,000 meters at the 2012 Summer Olympics in London.

ents as a refugee from Somalia. But in the documentary, he says his parents never were in the U.K. His father was killed by gunfire during unrest in Somalia when Farah was 4, according to the film. His mother and two brothers live on the family farm in Somaliland, a breakaway region of Somalia that is not internationally recognized. Farah says his fortunes changed when he was finally allowed to attend school. A teacher who was interviewed for the documentary recalled a 12-year-old boy who appeared "unkempt and uncared for," was "emotionally and culturally alienated" and spoke little English. But he began to blossom on the track and eventually told his story to a physical education instructor. The teacher reer is finished. That, or looking into becoming a physician's associate, are both on the table for Frerichs to help athletes after she hangs up her cleats, she said. Following her career in running and the classroom, Frerichs said she'd like to dedicate her time and academic knowledge to supporting other women athletes. She's done so in the past, meeting with athletes in her home state of Missouri through Zoom and in-person throughout Oregon. There's more to Frerichs than the stats and accolades that show up on the first page of a Google search, and she said she believes it's important for her to use her platform to show she's more than just an athlete. "Who are you outside of your sport?" Frerichs said. "In reality, we are so much more than that."

to the Home Office, the government agency responsible for border enforcement. Immigration authorities are also under pressure as the number of people entering the country on small boats jumped to 28,526 last year from 299 in 2018, government statistics show. Justine Carter of Unseen, a charity that deals with victims of modern slavery, stresses that it takes courage to overcome such conditions. Farah's revelation will let people around the world know that modern slavery can happen anywhere. "I just have to take my hat off to somebody who has come through that trauma and has lived that experience, but has actually still succeeded in life," she said. Besides raising awareness, Farah's example could encourage others to seek help. "There is always a way out. And I think Mo Farah has been living, breathing proof of that," she said. Politicians, sports figures and celebrities rushed to offer Farah their support. London Mayor Sadiq Khan praised his courage. "
