Guerrilla Shakespeare Company's annual Shakespeare productions in parks and other outdoor spaces were on their way to being a true Central Oregon tradition when, like so many arts organizations, they went quiet over the past two years.

Before the arrival of COVID-19, the company of local thespians offered faithful, creative takes on "Hamlet," "Macbeth" and other immortal Shakespeare in unique outdoor spaces around Central Oregon, including museum and cemetery lawns.

During the "pandemic stuff there was nothing going on," said Raechel Gilland, director of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," The Bard's busy 1605 play about four groups who get into love, mischief and sundry hijinks in a magical forest setting.
