The particulars of the accident, as given by his physician are, he was going down the mountain this side of Drewsey and one of the traces became detached wrapping round the horse's leg; he began kicking viciously, finally getting out of the road among the rocks and the stage was upset, Mr. Gates thrown out on the rocks dislocating one shoulder, a severe scalp wound and numerous bruises. The accident happened about two o'clock in the morning. Mr. Gates was unconscious for some time but finally coming to his senses and in this knocked out, bruised condition, managed to get the stage righted, the mail sacks aboard, the team hitched on, which fortunately had become tangled only a short distance from the stage, and drove into the next station about 8 o'clock in the morning.
