

What Harney Needs.

There are few counties in the United States so absolutely isolated from the outside world as Harney county, Oregon. Its principal city and county seat is 150 miles from the nearest railroad point, while the southern portion is nearly double that distance. Harney county is not a "rotten borough;" it has abundant resources, and its cattle industry is the most important in the state. In no portion of Oregon are the people less affected by the blighting business depression that hangs like a pall over the nation, than those of Harney county. In nearly all things they have the true Western push and enterprise. But save a little mild talk, they have never displayed any real effort to connect themselves with the outside world.

This is the very heel of the Nineteenth Century, and an age of the telephone and quick dispatch of news, when the information of today may mean the loss of hundreds of dollars if not received until tomorrow.

Harney county needs a telephone line that shall connect Burns, Harney City, Drewsey, and the different points along her principal route of travel. Her people and business interests demand this modern convenience, which, when once established, will become a necessity. It was scarcely one week ago when the Portland Oregonian intimated that Harney county got its news by freight. It can free itself of this charge by assisting in building a telephone line to this place, where it can connect with our line to Ontario.

There would be no trouble in selling the stock to the people living along the route, and the enterprise would pay from the time of completion.—Vale Advocate.

We will admit that Harney is isolated from the outside world. We are also cognizant of the fact that we need a telephone line. It takes the Ontario-Burns stage 36 hours to come from the railroad, and the happenings of the outside world are rather stale, but still news to us.

For several years the people of Canyon City, Grant county, have given out the statement that in a short time that city would be connected with some railroad point by telephone. That is what the people of Burns and Harney county have been waiting for. Had not outside people sent agents in here that said they were going to put up a line, make a big blow and let it end in wind, we would most certainly have had a telephone line in operation at this time. Canyon City is sixty miles nearer Burns than is Vale, consequently, we want to connect with the former place if possible.

The population of this county is small, but they are intelligent, energetic, and prosperous, fully alive to their interests. We have the best facilities for stock raising, raise all the vegetables that are used and plenty of grain for home consumption. We expect to have not only telephone connection with the outside world in a short time, but also a railroad, which will make this county one of the foremost in the state.
