A new government has been born to the south of us. Nicaragua, Salvador and Honduras have consolidated under the name of the United States of Central America. In December a federal president and a congress will be elected. The area of the republic is 99,425 square miles, which makes it a little larger than Oregon or Wyoming, and a little smaller than Colorado. The population is 1,579,578, which is less than that of North Carolina in 1890, and more than that of New Jersey, Kansas or Alabama. Salvador is the smallest in area, and the largest in population. It embraces 7225 square miles, and has 893,530 inhabitants. Nicaragua with 49,200 square miles and 300,000 inhabitants, is the largest in area and the smallest in population. Honduras has 43,000 square miles and a population of 360,000. A strong effort was made to unite all the Central American states under one government, but the jealousies which are ever prominent in Latin communities prevented the consummation of the plan. Guatemala and Costa Rica refused to join federation. These two states are about a match in area and population for the three states which have united their interest. They embrace 86,400 square miles, and have a population of 1,681,447. They are slightly larger than Utah, and their population is nearly what Wisconsin's was in 1890. Guatemala is the more prominent of the two. It has 63,490 square miles, and 1,438,242 people, while Costa Rica contains 23,000 square miles and 243,205 people.
