Candidates for office at the coming legislative session are bobbing up everywhere. Here are some: For the office of chief clerk there are two prominent candidates—S. L. Moorehead, of Junction City, and W. E. Yates, of Corvallis. M. J. Connor, of Salem, wants to be assistant clerk of the senate. J. B. Huntington, of Athena, and William Rasmus, of Portland, are pushing their claims for the office of reading clerk of the senate. J. S. Prudum of Grants Pass, has an idea he would make an admirable sergeant-at-arms, and J. E. Blundell, of Douglas county, formerly a member of the house, knows he can fill the position of doorkeeper for he has kept door before. G. O. Holman, of Portland, will want something, it is said, but just what it is not known, according to the Telegram. The canvass for office of railroad commissioner is also already active. Commissioners Macrum and Eddy, of the present board, desire to hold on, while Hon. F. N. Jones desires to get in. L. P. W. Quinby, of Portland, is desirous of getting the office of state fish and game protector, and already has a strong following. E. J. Seely, of Albany is the only man who has yet announced himself as a candidate for the office of state dairy commissioner.
