Mr. Elmer Armfield, of Missouri, accompanied by C. W. McClain, went to Silver creek Monday where Mr. Armfield purchased a lot of horses from C. J. Johnson. While on their return trip, at Fred Oakerman's, Mr. A. was taken very ill with severe cramps in the abdomen, rendering him delirious and violent in requiring the strength of two men to hold him. He was brought to Burns as speedily as possible and put under the treatment of Drs. Marsden & Geary and is, at present writing, feeling much better.

CLANG! CLANG! FIRE! FIRE!

Was The Alarm Pealed Forth At 2:30 Wednesday

And the fire laddies responded quickly to the work of extinguishing what promised to be a very destructive fire.

The woodshed of W. C. Cecil was on fire and burning briskly on the inside. The shed was within ten feet of the windmill tower, which is boarded up, and the tower is almost against the fine residence. Just east, and in the lay of the wind was L. Woldenburg's woodshed and residence, and should the fire have gotten beyond control these adjacent structures would likely have burned to the ground. But the timely arrival of the chemical engine No 1 and water company No 2 confined the fire to the shed alone, and had it not been for a can of kerosene and some linseed oil in the shed, which augmented the fire, the flames could have been extinguished much sooner.

Both engines did excellent work although the hose team was delayed by there being not enough hose on the reel to reach the fire, which necessitated a return to the engine house for more hose, but when both began to play the fire tongues soon ceased to leap out and in a short time were subdued.

Mrs. Cecil thinks the fire originated from ashes in which there were live coals, thrown near the shed. She also wishes to express her gratitude and thankfulness to the fire boys and citizens, and say that they will be long remembered.

This fire demonstrates the further needs to practically cope with fires back on the hill, and there is now strong talk of sinking cisterns near the buildings having windmills and tanks and thus keeping these cisterns filled. This with, 250 or 300 feet more hose for engine company No 2, would practically secure protection for the whole of the town.

It also suggested strongly that the county court should at least appropriate money to purchase hose enough to reach from the cisterns now sunk on main street to the court house and out buildings.

Also that we are in need of hooks and tuckel and more pickaxes to get a building down or openings through which to play water and chemical. This matter though was acted on last Wednesday night and a committee appointed to investigate and recommend for purchase such apparatus as was needed for the fire department.
