He, in company with Arthur Turner, rode on horseback to the Warm Spring ranch on Wednesday, where they secured a rig and came in on Thursday. Drs. Marsden & Geary set the arm and gave Harry some relief. The young man suffered very much previous to receiving surgical aid, and will be crippled for some time. They got into a quarrel at the sheep camp on the Little Stinking Water, and it resulted in Johnson being shot by Egbert with a 38-caliber revolver. We can give but few particulars. One report states that the wounded man started the attack on the other man with an ax. Dr. Marsden heard nothing of this. He left his patient in the killed hands of Dr. Standlee at Drewsey, and, although he was severely wounded, the doctor believes he will pull through.
