

An exchange strikes the nail on the head in the following:

"When we see the boys on the street and in public places we often wonder if they know that the business men are watching them. In every bank, store or office there will soon be a place for a boy to fill. Those who have the management of the affairs of the business will select a boy in whom they have confidence. When they select one of the boys they will not select him for his ability to swear, use slang, smoke cigarettes, or tap beer kegs. These men have few of these habits themselves, but they are looking for boys who are as near gentlemen in every sense of the word as they can find, and they are able to give the character of every boy in the city. They are not looking for rowdies, and when a boy applies for one of these places and is refused they may not tell the reason why they do not want him, but the boy may depend upon it he has been rated according to his behavior. Boys cannot afford to adopt the habits and conversation of loafers and rowdies if they ever want to be called upon to fill responsible positions."

New forces are at work, changing the public sentiment and political belief of Eastern Oregon, just as the question of holding the Philippines changed national politics, to a large degree. The forest reserve issue, the range question and kindred subjects growing out of these, are laying deep and lasting foundations for political changes.

New party lines are even now being laid, not with any noise, but silently, as public sentiment is crystallizing. Men are taking sides which will throw them hereafter into different spheres, and which will exact from them a vastly different political creed from that held in the past. In a country of such diversity of occupation the individual and public good are certain to clash here and there. This very condition is the basis of new friendships, new union of forces, which are naturally allied. Mining interests may be in conflict with stock interests; farming may be arrayed against both, and so on indefinitely, in the final result of present agitation. It is difficult to say where any man will find himself, when order succeeds the formative period of today.—East Oregonian.

The revival of the old talk that the tariff should be revised "by its friends" recalls a remark made by the late Roswell P. Flower. He said to "Tom" Reed one day: "I see the republicans have been revising the tariff," alluding to the McKinley rates. "do you know that reminds me of the way Kansas farmers build their fences?" "How's that?" said Reed, smelling something good. "Well, they build 'em four feet high and six feet wide, so when a cyclone comes along and blows them over they are higher than ever."—Ex.

Jerry Simpson will address the National Livestock convention on the subject: "The Evolution From a Populist Statesman to a Stockman." Mr. Simpson has shaken the Kansas dust from his sockless feet and is now a resident of New Mexico.

The Democrat ventures the prediction that Harvey W. Scott will be elected United States senator at the coming session of the Oregon legislature.—Baker Democrat.

One of the greatest needs of this county at the present time is a county board of trade which could set before the incoming immigrant the benefits to be derived from settling in our midst. The days of isolation are past and are rapidly fading into a dim memory and if we are not up and doing we are certain to fall by the wayside and not get our just dues. There are many other things that can be taken up by a county board of trade that would be of immense benefit to this country. In the first place the matter of county divisions would come under the supervision of this board and would be a part of the business that it would handle. A slight canvas of this subject among our citizens would, we believe, bring to light the fact that many of them have something of this sort for sometime past. This subject should be taken up and discussed and the feeling of the people of this county ascertained in the matter. Anyone having anything to say on the subject will gladly be given space in our columns for discussing their side of the question.—Prineville Journal.

The San Francisco Chronicle gives this explanation of Commissioner Hermann's enforced resignation, which is reprinted for whatever it may be worth: "There are indications that influences outside of the department co-operated with the unfriendly ones inside to force the Commissioner to resign. Mr. Hermann was opposed to the wholesale forest reserving of the public lands, and his opposition did not please the managers of the subsidized railroads. These used the forest reserves as convenient agents to relieve themselves of worthless remnants of their land grants which were unsalable. They were absorbed, however, in the reserves and valuable lieu lands selected elsewhere. The operation was a profitable one to them. The Northern Pacific Railway is said to have made $7,500,000 by this system of exchange."

How can anybody enjoy being miserable?

Men do, and so do women. They surround themselves with an atmosphere of gloom. They lug trouble to their breasts. They make mountains out of mole hills, and there are tears and groans where there should be smiles.

Perhaps you have a cynic in your employ. You can pick him out with your eyes shut. He has the blues from Monday morning till Saturday night. He will tell you that he gets the worst of it from everybody; that his talent isn't recognized; that he isn't getting enough money; that there is no future for him—and a lot of tommyrot like that.

After that comes the brooding stage. Any man who broods over real or fancied wrongs is dangerous. He is not sane, and he is also a mighty poor workman, whether he is making hoc handles or counting money in a bank. He deliberately destroys his own efficiency and chances for success, and all for the perilous questionable happiness of being miserable.

It doesn't pay. Don't brood. Don't lose self-confidence. Keep the fire of hope burning in your breast and you can't be miserable long. There is always a tomorrow ahead. Perhaps it will bear more fruit than it did today.—Dallas Chronicle.
