THE OREGON JOURNAL WAGON.
The Oregon Journal horseless carriage drawn by two mules, arrived here Tuesday in charge of Paul DeLaney and E. A. Pater-baugh. These gentlemen are making a tour of Central and Southeastern Oregon gathering data for a special edition of Portland's new evening paper to be devoted exclusively to the great inland empire of this state. The paper will be 32 pages and the resources and possibilities of this section given in a complete manner.
Mr. DeLaney is one of the best descriptive writers in the West and many of his interesting articles on the interior have already appeared in many papers. He is the author of the "Lord of the Desert," the plot of which was outlined during a former visit here and the scenes are in the Stein Mountain and Warner valley sections.
Mr. Paterbaugh has charge of the subscription part of the trip and is adding many names to the list of the bright new Journal.
C. S. Jackson editor of the Oregon Journal, was for many years publisher of the East Oregonian.
He knows the worth of Southeastern Oregon, its many advantages and opportunities. Realizing the fact that it has long been neglected by the big newspapers of the state, he has sent these representatives to gather data for a special edition.
There will be at least 15000 of this issue circulated and it may reach 30,000.
The people of the interior should encourage this matter as it will be the first general and exclusive write up of the interior ever given
