NEWELL SAYS OREGON IS ASLEEP.

Lack of Interest Shown in Government Irrigation Work.

Oregonian News Bureau, Washington, Oct. 13.—"The people of Oregon, in contrast with residents of other Western States, manifest little or no interest in the great subject of irrigation," said F. H. Newell, of the geological survey, chief engineer in charge of all Government reclamation work. Mr. Newell but recently returned from Oregon, where he personally inspected the several irrigation withdrawals that are now being carefully surveyed by field engineers. Even in the neighborhood of proposed Government works, he reports the people are not interested in the intended development of the regions for most of the reclaimable lands are located in regions now given up entirely to stock-raising, and stockmen seem to see no personal benefit in irrigation.

The few men who are actively booming irrigation, says Mr. Newell, "are those who control large tracts of land lying under proposed irrigation projects, and these men are working solely in their own behalf. There is an absolute lack of public enthusiasm, however, which is remarkable, in view of the vast benefits that will accrue to the State of Oregon as a result of the irrigation of its arid lands."

Mr. Newell also commented upon the Oregon representation at the recent Irrigation Congress. He said there was a glaring lack of enthusiasm on the part of the delegation. There was no evidence of any concentration of purpose, and the impression left upon the government engineers and others present was that the Oregon delegation had little interest in the great work that was being discussed and planned.
