It is at least indicative of the new aspiring and courageous spirit of the democratic party of the state that it puts itself in the very forefront of the national political movement by announcing a local choice for the presidential nomination.

Fortunately, too, that choice rests upon a man who so singularly enjoys the respect, admiration and good will of those who know him, regardless of their politics.

Governor George Earle Chamberlain has behind him a record of unbroken political success. It is the jobs which no one else cared to tackle that have usually come to Chamberlain. In the line of what he considered to be his duty he has never avoided an emergency or shrunk back from a forlorn hope. In the face of it all he has never failed in a political battle and on the very heels of the achievement of the apparently impossible, when he grasped the district attorney prize in this county, he gathered himself together, at the behest of his party, and landed himself in the governor's chair which he now so ably fills.

It is not surprising, therefore, that his friends and admirers believe that he has reached the national stature in the great game of politics or that the mention of his name in that connection should arouse the hearty enthusiasm and stimulate the fighting spirit of a party which has existed since the organization of the government and which is destined to live until the far distant day when popular government perishes from the face of the earth.

A better time could not be chosen. There is no man anywhere who stands forward so conspicuously the choice of the national party as to obscure all other aspirants. There are favorite sons of states but no favorite sons of the whole nation. It is there fore, as seldom before, a free and open field to which representative men everywhere may reasonably aspire and where friends of men of the character, achievements and intellectual qualities of Governor Chamberlain are presented with opportunities which may well inspire them to prodigies of valor and new heights of intellectual endeavor.—Portland Journal.

"Sockless" Jerry Simpson who has changed from a populist politician to a successful stockman, attended the convention of the National Stock Association at Portland last week. He made the following reply to the question of selling the range land:

"I am opposed to that plan, because it would favor monopoly. No matter if you gave the owners of adjoining property the preference and limit the size of the tracts sold to any one man, the range would soon get in the hands of a few men. Homesteads were limited to 160 acres, but that has not prevented the formation of large ranches. Much of the land now included in the open range will be reclaimed under the irrigation act, and if the government were to sell the range wholesale, this might be included and thus irrigation would be hindered. Wherever you can make a home for the people, I would be opposed to turning the land over to cattle and sheep. Men come first. But there are many million acres which are not fit for anything else, and some not even for that."

The rules of country printing offices are the same nearly the world over, says Western Ways. The weekly work must be done and then the boys can go to the races. If one is sick he must "grin and bear it," all the time thinking how easy it will be when he gets well. No matter what happens the paper must be printed on time. If one decides to die he can get off by giving the editor two weeks notice. When you visit a printing office always be quiet. Take your two dollars out carefully and slip it into the editor's hand which you will always find standing ajar. Do not allow the boys in the office to hear the ring of silver because there are 16 chances to 1 that they will become excited and strike for more rations. Don't stand and rubber at the editor's tattered garments because he might see you and editor's are all proud. Most of them have noted kinsmen—members of the legislature, section bosses, etc. In order to visit a printing office properly you should have practice. You should run in often—whenever your subscription is out at least.
