If Country Editors Told the Truth.

A lot of young folk people calling themselves the Bugtown Dramatic Society gave a performance of "Ten Days in a Dope Joint" last night in a barn some times known as the Bugtown opera-house.

Some of the girls would better be helping their mothers wash the dishes and mind the baby than be lalagaging around with fool fellows and long-tailed dresses.

The boys taking part in the alleged performance looked like a flock of sissies, and we wouldn't give them a job feeding press.

Quite a crowd paid two bits a head in the hopes of seeing the "actors" make fools of themselves, and looked at that way the show was sure worth the money.

Tillie Topnot was the Duchess of St. Germins and if real dookesses are any thing like she looked last night we don't wonder the foreign dookess come here to marry American heiressees.

Bowlegged Billy Stumps acted the villain, and he was a comic sight in tight. He forgot all his words and tried to get off the gags he had been using in the drugstore for the last three years.

They were fizzles. Polly Graphit looked all right the first act when she wore a mask, but she was a fright in the second, and her sallow complexion showed through the red paint which was put on like she was painting her pop's barn.

Our advice to the Bugtown Dramatic Society is to quit acting and go to work—Oregonian.

The University of Washington won the third annual intercollegiate debate from the University of Oregon at Seattle last Friday by a decision of two to one. The Oregon men put up a good debate, but the Washington men were stronger. The question debated was "Resolved, That the history of trade unions in the United States for the past twenty years has been beneficial to the best interests of the country." Oregon had the affirmative. In the series of debates begun three years ago with Washington, Oregon won the first and lost the last two
