The Farm Boy in Cities.

Somebody, who declares that he has made an honest canvass, reports that 94 per cent of the leading citizens of 24 of the largest cities east of Chicago were born and raised on a farm.

A poll of the commercial, professional and representative men of Chicago showed that 25 per cent were raised in the country and rural villages. Seventeen of our 23 presidents came from the farm.

For this there are at least three reasons: One is that the country air, food and exercise are essential to a healthy brain, and another that the habit of work almost invariably acquired early in life by the farmer boy.

On the contrary, he has been so taught, or mistaught, that when he was through with the home school, he must needs go to the country town and continue his studies, and from the country town to the college or commercial schools where he could fit himself for life in the city.

There is no statute expressly prohibiting the fencing of government land; but courts of equity will recognize the offense and give relief by injunction.

This will be given new subscribers and old ones who renew during the month.
