Sheep's Horn Embeded in Tree.

In 1888 Jason Elder of Paisley who is one of our most efficient forest rangers, while rambling in the woods came across a yellow pine tree in which he discovered at the base, a mountain sheep horn imbeded therein, and which he longed to investigate, but no favorable opportunity presented itself to do so until October 3rd, when Elder, who was supervising the building of the government trail at and near the place where the tree stood, cut it down, and cutting a block from the tree in which the horn was embeded and sent it to Guy M. Ingram, Forest Supervisor at Lakeview, and which Mr. Ingram highly prizes, and is a curiosity, rarely, if ever seen before. The tree was 3½ feet in diameter and was 213 years old. The horn was a little to one side of the center of the tree and ran in a circular direction, and instead of being curled as mountain sheep horns are was almost straight. From the outside of the horn to the outside of the tree, it showed since it was imbeded therein, 182 years had elapsed. The horn was soaked with pitch, and was 30 inches long. The horn at the base was ten inches in diameter, and portruded from the tree about six inches.—Silver Lake Leader.

"If Easterners could be made to know the exact truth about the climate of Umatilla county, this inducement would be sufficient to bring thousands of them here," says the Pendleton East Oregonian. This is true, and the papers of most if not all counties in Oregon could say the same. The climate of the several sections of Oregon differs much making a wide variety of climate in the state as a whole, but of all sections it can be said that the climate during most of the year would be an agreeable and even a delightful change from that of the northernmost states east of the Rocky mountains. Hence, in literature sent out not only the prolific productions of Oregon's soil but the mildness and general agreeableness and healthfulness of Oregon's climate should be made prominent and emphasized.

During the winter and early spring is a good time of the year to get this literature before the people of the Dakotas, Minnesota, Iowa, Michigan, Nebraska and Wisconsin. We don't believe most of the people there really like the long severe winters and scorching, if short, summers, and that many of them would pull up stakes and light out for Oregon if they were duly impressed with the aggreeable features of our climate.—Journal.
