Which? Words or Deeds?

Some banks solicit business merely with the view of securing a deposit, without regard to the welfare of the prospective customer. Rosy, but deceptive promises are made, the actual fulfillment of which, at all times, would be an utter impossibility for any legitimate bank to attempt.

We solicit your banking business, but we solicit it purely on a banking basis. Our promises are confined to the assurance that you will receive fair, considerate treatment and be rendered every service consistent with safe banking. Our record for protecting the interests of our patrons is most conclusive evidence that their interests are given every consideration, and that their patronage has not been sought from merely selfish motives. Deeds-alone, not words, protect your business interests at those times when financial assistance in the way of a needed loan is essential to the protection of your business affairs.

is especially called to the fact that our Surplus equals our Capital, OR FIVE TIMES THE MAXIMUM AMOUNT REQUIRED BY THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT, which fact in connection with our conservatism, constitutes the best guarantee of safety to depositors.

A Contrast In Banking.

Several thousand years ago, agriculture was the chief occupation of the people. Commercial pursuits were limited. Safety for funds was about all the people required. There were no banks with steel safes and thick-walled vaults.

Safety for money was had by turning it over to the priests who kept the gold and silver in the temples. The Greeks and Romans considered that religious sentiments kept their money secure under the protection of the priests.

Usually the money was safe in the temples, but frequent wars and invaders sacked the temples of all riches.

Note the advance in banking today. The people who deposit their money get many material benefits aside from the mere safety—they can issue checks, draw interest on their money, buy drafts, borrow, come to their banker for advice on their financial matters.

This bank has modern methods in bookkeeping, means to protect funds from fire and burglary are used, mechanical devices operate to give customers promptness and accuracy.

Our service is the acme of hundreds of years of banking experience; the best methods have been selected. The requirements of our customers are studied, their needs are met by satisfactory service.
