In August, 1907, we announced to the public our general banking policy under the heading, "Our Fixed Policy." This announcement was prompted by the fact that practices were being indulged in by some banks which we deemed unsafe, and more particularly by the fact that a large savings bank in Portland, Oregon, had just failed. Believing these practices contrary to safe banking, we announced clearly and positively our position on certain vital banking principles. At that time we did not foresee the test our policy was soon to be subjected to in the severe panic which occurred that fall and within 60 days of that announcement, nor the financial depression our section was to undergo during the eighteen months to follow, which depression is only now abating.

Bearing these facts in mind, we again call attention to that statement of "Our Fixed Policy" exactly as it appeared in August, 1907—except as to the amount of our surplus, which, in the meantime, has been increased from $15,000.00 to $25,000.00—which statement will appear in the next issue of this paper. Especially do we call attention to the fact that by adhering strictly to these correct banking principles as therein set forth, this bank was able to protect the interests of all its patrons during the panic of 1907, and the subsequent financial depression of last year and the past winter, making loans to all its customers at all times, upon good and satisfactory security, when same were needed to protect their legitimate business interests.

Number 15. The Bank and the School House. Not long ago, there were many towns that did not have a single bank. Today, banks have become so important in everyday life that when a new town is started the schoolhouse and the bank are among the first institutions. Along with education goes the bank, hand in hand. The people consider the service of the bank as important and necessary as the schoolhouse. Each is a part of the community's successful existence. The fathers and mothers who send their children to the schoolhouse, come to the bank as regularly as the children go to school. The bank contributes to the future success of men and women as the schoolhouse does to the preparation of the children for successful lives. The benefits of our service add to the upbuilding of the community and surrounding territory. Our service is adjustable to the different needs of the people. As the children go to their teacher for personal assistance, YOU can come to us for individual help in financial matters. We are as deeply interested in your business success as the teacher is in the advancement of the pupils. Our service and benefits are as freely given to the people as instruction is to the school children. Will you join our customers? There has been little change in the railroad situation since last week but news of importance may be announced most any day. The committee who have circulated the bonus subscription are ready to make their report. Grant Geddes stated over the telephone that he would make a trip to Prairie City as soon as possible to consider the question of extending the railroad. It is confidently believed here that when the railroad officials meet the business men and state more definitely what they want as a bonus the people will comply with their requests which we have every cause to believe will be reasonable.
