

HOW TO GET "LIKED."

There is much needless moaning over unpopularity and selfish favoritism among some girls.

Do you wonder why you are not liked as much as other girls in your set? Look in—not out—for the reason.

Instead of saying: "Of course, Mary gets invited—she has money!" or questioning the good taste of a hostess in inviting Isabelle, who is plain and poor, when she might have had you, ask yourself: "Why am I not invited?"

Sometimes, if you are honest in your questioning, the answer will be: "There is no reason why I should be invited; not everyone can be asked every time, and Mrs. Blank has been kinder to me than courtesy demanded."

There is no surer way to have a discontented life than to expect to ring in on every invitation that is given. Learn to recognize social obligations and you will cease to hunt slights.

More difficult is it to trace lack of success to your own failings. The girl who is sweet when it pleases her and rudely indifferent at other times; the girl who takes all and gives nothing, who accepts favors as her due, yet neglects the common courtesy of a call; the girl who abuses hospitality by conspicuous flirtations in corners or by rudeness to other guests; the girl who can only be pleasant to men or to those who she thinks can advocate her interests, may each and all be honestly surprised that invitations grow fewer.

To answer truly, no matter how that answer cuts deep, is not given to most of us. It is a trick worth cultivating, especially when the question is the important one, "Why am I not liked?"

Almost invariably the secret of being liked is to be likable. The girl who is honestly determined to give pleasure—not to be pleased, which is something quite different—rarely falls short of success.

If we want to be liked, few of us are so unfortunate that we fail, provided our desire to win favor is not mere selfish policy or mean currying of good will. Often the girl who tries hardest to be liked because of the benefits in store for popularity falls short, where her less self-seeking friend who is likable because she herself likes others, not what those others may give, wins out.

Don't get soured and pessimistic if you think your charms are unappreciated. Make it your business to be so agreeable that liking cannot fail to come your way.—Ex.

Homer Davenport, the cartoonist, is on his way to Oregon to give a lecture tour. While in San Francisco Saturday he announced that he contemplates publishing a weekly paper in Portland. No details of this enterprise were given out, as Davenport is only considering the idea at present. It was in Portland that Davenport's sketches first appeared in the pages of a newspaper.

For the past week the Sumpster Valley railroad has been hauling their cars to the summit at Dixie and the mail has been arriving here in the early evening. It is not thought that this schedule will be continued, as the snow is thawing and the road bed being new it will be impossible to maintain any regular service.—Blue Mt. Eagle.
