

ARE LARGE BROODS PROFITABLE?

Twelve hundred fluffy little chicks one day old enclosed in a circular space twelve feet in diameter and mothered by a single old stove, represents one of the peculiar features of an experiment which is now being carried on by Professor James Dryden of the Oregon Agricultural College.

The experiment is for the purpose of testing the feasibility of raising chickens in large flocks. It has been the belief up to this time that chickens could be raised only in small broods. If the new method proves successful it will be a great boon to the poultry industry.

The chicks which are being used in this experiment were hatched in incubators. Twelve machines were used; the machines producing an average of one hundred chicks each. This number of chickens were hatched from a total of 1350 eggs.

"The reason why some towns grow is because there are men of push and energy in them, who are not afraid to spend their time and money to boom the town. They erect substantial buildings, organize stock companies and establish factories, secure railroads, work for public improvement and use all in their power to induce people to locate in their city. Wherever they go they tell of the advantages of their city, they write about them in every letter, they send circulars and newspapers to all whom they think they can get to visit the city. When anyone visits them they treat him so kindly that he falls in love with them and their city at once. It is enterprise and every one pulling together that makes a progressive town and don't let the fact escape your memory."—Ex.
