The gipsy moth was imported into this country for scientific time. The legislature of Massa- all good Dealers. chusetts appropriated $50,000 for their extermination, but to little avail. Within ten years, over $1,000,000 was spent in the work, followed by an appropriation of $300,000 in one year, yet the gipsy moth was unconquered. The state finally gave up the work, and one property owner spent over $75,000 on his own estate in an effort to stem the fearful slaughter of the trees.

It will not take long for the Oregon farmer, fruit grower or timber owner to appreciate the enormity of this fearful destruction, after investigating the failure of the state of Massachusetts. What would happen to these a foothold? It is a popular belief that birds of certain kinds are destructive to fruit trees, while an analysis of bird stomachs show conclusively that insect life is their chief food. As a matter of fact, the harm that they do, which is slight, is greatly exceeded by the good.

It is estimated by the Department of Agriculture that the damage sustained by insect infestation, to the American tree is 62,500,000 annually. Does any one dare estimate how much this damage would be increased, were the forest enemies to make Oregon their battle ground? The time to check their inroads is now, when it is expected they are making this way. The bird life of the state should be loyally protected.
