JULIAN BYRD MANAGER

BILL BOOSTS HOME COUNTRY

One of the best speeches made at the recent meeting of the Development League in Astoria was made by Bill Hanley according to the advices received through the Portland papers. The following are paragraphs from a report published in the Journal:

Enthusiasts for the development of Oregon who listened to the address of William Hanley, the "cattle king from Burns," yesterday evening, declared it one of the richest things they had heard. With constantly outcropping mother wit that compelled continuous applause, Hanley told of the eastern Oregon "desert."

"We've got the richest land in the world," exclaimed Hanley, who is not only vice president of the Oregon Development league, but president of the Central Oregon Development league.

Hanley pleaded for training of newcomers and old residents by means of "soil schools," branches of the Agricultural college. He advocated the use of western resources by westerners, saying that if easterners want the benefit of western resources they should come here and live. Colonel Hanley said:

"When that wise old Dutchman, John Jacob Aster, founded this town he was looking for skins in competition with the Hudson Bay company. He was dealing in the products of the wilderness, furs. What has made the difference between that day and this? Population! What supports all your steamship lines and railways? Population! What makes all your cities? Population. And what supports the cities themselves? The country population back of them.

"You can see that everyone of us ought to do what we can to increase the population. Now, I am a country man; I am from the center of the state—what they call the desert—but I want to tell you to forget it. That name—forget it. It is the richest soil on earth, the water is there to irrigate it. If it isn't in the streams from the mountains, or from the heavens, to be conserved by scientific cultivation, it is underneath, either in artesian or to be pumped.

"There is no limit to the development of that country in alfalfa, clover, wheat, barley, sugar beets, meats, and all the leading staples. It is ready to support millions of population, but where is the population? Well, the population is ready, too. Back east, in the middle west, and in Germany, France, Sweden and Norway, and the best parts of Europe. We can double the population of Oregon and then double it again, in a very few years, if we all pull together.

"What is needed? Railways, to bring in the population and carry out the products; irrigation by gravity or otherwise; good roads to feed the railways, as good roads are just as necessary as a railroad.

"The cities, and especially Portland, should furnish money or finance legitimate, good, business like irrigation plans. They should insist on railroads, and if my good friend here Mr. Gray, won't build them, I say we should build them ourselves. I never could see much difference between a county road, irrigation district or railroad, except cost. All of them are highways for the people. There is a difference in operation, of course, but operation is not, and never has been hitched up with ownership. Lots of railroads are operated by people who do not own them.

"Now, I suppose I am a cattle man if I'm anything, but I want to tell you, rich lands for farms and homes were never meant to raise cattle on. It is poor economy to take wide acres to graze a few cattle on when in the same business, even by highly cultivated products they could support many times as many cattle to higher perfection of both people and cattle. A range country can never be a populous country, and I have told you all our cities, all of our prosperity, depends upon people, people, people! But you cannot get the people unless you give them a chance. It is no use to boom and advertise, and not be ready for them when they come. They want a home and a chance to be happy and comfortable.

"To get this population which we must have, which is the basis of all growth and prosperity, we must not be bottled up on our natural resources. I do not believe in waste nor do I believe in the mere speculator who holds out lands against settlement and use, but I do believe in every locality and its population having the closest right to its own resources.

"The east has had its resources, it has used them and built up on them. My idea is that the east has no right to say to us, 'We will bottle up your resources for future generations.' We of this coast want to use our resources now, as use is conservation and economy, and we want the right just as the east had the use of its resources. We do not believe in the principle that the natural resources belong to all the people when all the natural resources are in the west and all the people in the east, but we do believe that all our natural resources belong to all the people if they must come west to collect their interest in them.

"To give you a better understanding of my ideas of organization. The soil that is unused, or is not properly used, to the very highest state of development, is a loss to all, and not so serious to the individual owner, as it makes no difference to society in general what the ownership of the soil is if it does not produce anything.

"Every reservoir, canal and irrigation system should be financed by a large credit on sound basis. All power should be developed to make country life as attractive as city life, so that cities would not be so much in advance of their creator, as there must be a limit of time when they will be called upon for their false inventories of values based on their share of the country's product that is not being produced."

Save trouble and inconvenience by taking Sunday dinner at the French Hotel.

LOST—On the streets a plain gold bracelet. Suitable reward if finder will return to this office.

President Crooks of the Albany College arrived here last Saturday remaining over Sunday. He was out in the interest of the school and looks forward to an exceptionally good school year. Mr. Crooks spoke at the Baptist church Sunday evening, there being no service in the Presbyterian church, and left for Crook county Monday morning.

ENJOYABLE DANCING PARTY.

A large party of invited guests enjoyed a delightful dancing party at Locher's hall last Tuesday evening given by Judge and Mrs. H. C. Levens and Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Schwartz, Miss Alma Gunning and the Misses Avis and Ethel Sheridan being the guests of honor.

The hostesses were assisted by a number of young ladies in receiving and some of them also presided at the punch bowl during the evening. The programs provided twenty-four numbers which were most thoroughly enjoyed to music furnished by Welker's four piece orchestra.

The hall was very tastefully decorated for the occasion, pink and white being the predominant colors. Every comfort was provided for the guests who were profuse in their appreciation.

It was a most delightful mid-summer affair and a social function which the hostesses may feel proud of. There were over one hundred couples present.

Fruit punch was served throughout the evening and the hosts seemed to be everywhere in the hall at once to anticipate the pleasure of their guests.
