Judge Worden of Klamath Falls struck the nail on the head last night, when he suggested Klamath, Lake, Harney and Crook counties get together on their advertising matter. In not only would be a great saving, but better advertising could be done. Another good suggestion he made was the improvement of the Burns-Bend auto road. Let's make it the finest in the state. Crook and Harney counties have the material and money why not get at it? Do it right, and do it now.

A. O. Hunter made a hit last night when he suggested an irrigation convention. The Carey act segregations in Oregon have been a curse. They have not been conducted in a business manner. This is an important matter in which the entire state is interested.

The decorations at Masonic Hall where the noon-day luncheon was served yesterday and today were appropriate and suggestive. Alfalfa, wheat, rye and other native products were used on the tables as though they were potted plants.

Give us railroads and irrigation and the farmers will come all right, and the kind that Mr. Rinehart was speaking about the ones with the stamina to stick until they win out.

We all like J. A. Rinehart who so ably represented Gov. West last night. He is a "Made in Oregon" production and we are proud of him. His mirth and wit early captivated the audience which he held at his fingers ends, until the closing words. He showed his readiness to grasp a situation when the stereopticon blew up with a loud report, he said: "Now what in the world was that," as if it was a part in a carefully prepared speech. J. A. you are all right with your "peg-legged Dutch" and all the rest.

O. C. Leiter of the Oregonian, "Country Newspaper Publicity and country Correspondents." D. O. Lively, of the Union Stock Yards, "Hogs, More of Them." The Times-Herald will devote space to all these subjects later in the week as it hasn't space today.

At the noon luncheon a most enjoyable and profitable hour was spent. The secretaries of the various committees spoke of their experience in handling correspondence, reaching intending investors and results. Among the speakers were Mr. Oliver of Klamath, Mr. Rice of Lakeview, Mayor Jones of Redmond, T. M. Baldwin of Prineville. Mr. McMurray of the Harriman railroad system made one of the most telling talks when called upon at luncheon. He is completely carried away with this big country and said he wanted to spend two or three weeks here. "No books, magazines, newspapers or any other mode of advertising can tell about this magnificent country," said Mr. McMurray. He pledged the system he represents to the support of Central Oregon. Every means of publicity they have is to be focused on this section. They are ready. He regrets the apparent lack of interest in the communities where inquiries are received. A general letter to be sent out in response to these inquiries "don't go" with him. Every letter should have personal attention and followed up if necessary.

Mr. Johnson, chairman of the executive committee of the Portland Commercial Club assured us of the deep interest that city has in the development of this section. "Portland stands for the upbuilding of all Oregon" said Mr. Johnson, "and we are yours to command."

Immediately following the luncheon the school children marched down to main street, headed by the band, and escorted

Marshall N. Dana, of the Portland Journal, at this afternoon's session in some well chosen remarks struck a keynote that has future possibilities of considerable import. Among them he suggested that for the larger development of Oregon's resources the Leagues appoint from among their membership and several localities men representative of the agricultural, industrial, mercantile, manufacturing and stock-raising pursuits for the purpose of holding conferences and then bring their suggestions and conclusions to these conventions with a view of developing the larger interests thus securing to the local the best possible returns thus obviating an attempt at developing hit-an-miss fashion, locality for locality, individual for individual, and never attaining anything definite.
