Good Roads. Whom Do They Benefit?

The value of all good roads to all classes is set forth in the Highway Improvement bulletin issued by the extension division of the Oregon Agricultural College as follows:

"No issue before the American people affects the entire country more than better highways. An excessive tariff is burdensome to many, but at least it is satisfactory to a few, while bad roads injure all alike..."

"To the automobilist, the improved roads mean opportunities to get the full use of the car every day, instead of being obliged to wait until the highways happen to be in a passable condition."

"To the farmer, better roads frequently mean the difference between affluence and also bankruptcy. The farmer receives as great financial gains from good roads as anyone, he has an added advantage in the social benefits involved..."

THE POSSIBILITIES OF PRODUCTION IN OREGON

The production of corn for the grain and of sorghum and kafir corn may be confined to the lower valleys east of the Cascade mountains...

Oregon is no less to the fore with its tubers. The potatoes which it grows on the dry lands are unexcelled in quality and on the irrigated lands in yields.

The opportunities for development are simply without parallel. At the present time, but 4,098, 104 acres of tillable land have been cultivated, while the remaining 19,542,129 acres of tillable land has never been touched by plow...

Oregonians aboard the special Royal Rosarian train that invaded California the past week made many friends for this state in the South. Their route was marked by demonstrations of welcome that proved the high regard in which the beaver state is held and which will mean that Oregon will have a very prominent place in the 1915 expositions both at San Francisco and San Diego.

The livestock industry in Oregon is in a sense self-contained—that is, it is virtually independent of the necessity for replenishing it from the outside. On the millions of acres of rugged and rocky lands within the state, bunch and other grasses will continue to grow freely amid the sagebrush that is found on these, providing they are not over-pastured.

The markets of the rapidly growing cities of the coast will soon absorb these, hence the expense of transportation will be greatly reduced. The opportunity for building up a magnificent dairy industry, especially on the irrigated lands east of the Cascades will thus become a fact and a boon to that section.

OREGON'S STANDING AS STOCK GROWING STATE

for them the next few years. The coast counties, the great Willamette valley, and the irrigated sections of eastern Oregon offer almost unequalled conditions for the dairy business.

Portland is the only live stock market center on the coast, there being none other west of St. Paul and Denver. The recent erection there of large stock yards and a packing plant is going to greatly improve and augment the business of growing and feeding beef cattle, mutton sheep and hogs by giving a more stable and discriminating market. Largely for lack of this Oregon has, heretofore, shipped from the east 85 per cent of the pork she consumes. This condition will not long continue. Oregon farmers are fast finding that alfalfa, clover, kale, rape, peas, barley, and wheat, coupled with this salubrious climate, will produce the choicest of pork and at as great a profit as in the corn belt.

Oregon ranks sixth among the states of the Union as to the number and value of her sheep and second as to the average weight of fleece, viz., eight and one-half pounds. The average weight of fleece in the other leading sheep-growing states varies from five and one-half to seven pounds.

The average weight of fleece for the whole United is 6.8 pounds. While the sheep industry on the range can not be increased, it is not likely to diminish, as most of the land now used by the sheepmen is not land that can be devoted to agricultural purposes. The breeding of purebred bucks of the long and medium wool breeds in the Willamette valley for supplying the range breeders, presents almost unlimited opportunities. Conditions are ideal for the production of bucks that can not be equaled in the eastern states, and the range men having learned this stand ready to take all that can be produced.

The New Parcel Post And The Merchants

The new-parcel post law has been viewed with a great deal of misgiving by retail merchants everywhere. However it should give them new opportunities of which they have had little conception, says the Salem Statesman.

It improves their position as respects distant mail order houses 300 to 600 miles away must pay 62 cents to get a ten pound parcel mailed. The local merchant serving the same article to a 50-mile territory can get the same thing carried for 32 cents. He can send it for local delivery, including such rural routes as may start at the home office for 14 cents.

A mail order house over 1000 miles away must pay 91 cents to get such a parcel mailed.

It should be possible for the local merchants of Salem to develop a good trade in the outlying country for the material to be delivered by parcels post.

Suppose a farmer wants a steak for dinner. He can order it by telephone and have it mailed within 50 miles for 8 cents. The possibilities for the development of this business are unlimited. The postage is cheaper than the time he would spend in the provision store making his purchase and paying for it.

In the outlying country around this city there is thus a great potential trade awaiting for someone to get. It will go to the man who gets after it with advertising.

The people in the farm home rarely pass the town merchant's shop window. They will do their shopping through a newspaper. There the merchant has a chance to show them his goods. It is a great show window in which the entire community looks every day. Formerly high express charges threw obstacles around mail order business to the nearby territory. Now the lower rates and the spread of rural delivery a big new field for the merchant with an outlying country to draw from.
