Advertiser With a Plan.

There is as much difference between an advertiser with a plan and an advertiser without a plan as there is between the builder of a fine residence with a plan and the builder of a residence without a plan. Whether in the building of a building or the building of a business the same rule holds true—success or failure is just the difference between planning before building and building before planning. In the one instance the result is fixed and certain while in the other instance it is like taking a leap in the dark.

In all the catalogue of business activity the merchant as a class is operating without definite selling plans, and the merchant class is failing at the rate of 95 out of every 100.

The average merchant buys his goods, hires his clerks, opens his doors for business and goes after the money—the natural effect of business activity. He says by his conduct: "I'm after the money." There is nothing so distasteful to the trading public as the merchant whose only purpose is to get their money. The people want value received and satisfaction for every dollar expended, and the merchant who embarks in business with the determination to render the public the best service possible has really adopted a good selling plan, and is headed toward the goal of a permanent and profitable business.

The selling plan is incomplete however without a definite advertising plan. It is said that over 75 per cent of the money spent for advertising is a waste because of no definite advertising plan. And yet, in the face of this appalling waste, the majority of the merchants go at this great problem of business building with their eyes shut. They should open their eyes to the situation and become master salesmanship on paper. The master salesmen are the master business builders.

Stockmen Recognized.

During the past fiscal year, according to a report of the U. S. forest service, 31 local organizations of stockgrowers using national forest ranges have applied for and secured the official recognition of their advisory boards by the forest service. This brings the number of associations officially recognized by the forest service to a total of 115. Through the medium of these advisory boards several thousand stockmen who graze stock upon the national forests now take an active part of discussing all problems of forest administration which affect their interests. The result, states the forest service report, has been the elimination of misunderstanding regarding the requirements of the stock interests and an improvement in methods of range control which has won the endorsement and approval of the large majority of the persons who depend upon the national forests for the pasturage of their stock.

Two of the stockmen's organizations are national in their scope and one is a state organization. The remaining 11 are local organizations. The stockmen have, it is said, been successful in securing advisory boards composed of broadminded, unselfish men of wide practical experience who have worked for the best interests of their industry but at the same time have given intelligent consideration to the need for forest protection, and who therefore have directed their recommendations along constructive lines.

The recent order of Secretary Houston extending official recognition to organizations of other classes of forest users is said to have resulted mainly from the large measure of success won by the cooperation of the government with the stockmen.

Prof. Thos. Shaw Coming For Fair

The Times-Herald is pleased to announce to the farmers of this county that Prof. Thos. Shaw, the Great Northern Railroad Farm Expert, will make a tour of this county beginning next Friday at Riley and covering the entire county during the week following.

Prof. Shaw is one of the most quoted soil experts of the West and he gives some very practical lectures that are worth much to the farmer and his opinion is sought by many people who are looking for investments or a change in location for farming purposes. He has been here before and has told our people what a good country we have and his visit this time will be of greater benefit as he will go out and spread the gospel of fine crops throughout the Harney country.

Prof. Shaw has been routed by the Burns Commercial Club as follows: Riley school house Sept. 26, 7:30 p. m. Burns, Sept. 27, at Tonawanda Theatre at 8 p. m. This lecture will be accompanied by industrial moving pictures that will bring out some good points and be very beneficial to all who attend. The Money-Maker.

A subscriber writes in and asks, why is it that we claim that the hog is the greatest money-maker of all farm animals? This statement is not often questioned. It is acknowledged by most people who have given it any consideration.

The hog is an economical cog in the farm operation. He is a conservator of waste, a gleaner in the fields. A helper of the farmer in adding to his bank balance. Because of his saving qualities, he has been denominated as "The gentleman that pays the rent for the householder; the mortgage lifter for the farmer."

In the past he was adopted by the farmers of the corn and hog belt as the only feasible way of marketing the corn crop. Being turned into the field and fattened, this was known as "hogging the corn," thus saving all of the labor of gathering, storing and feeding out again.

At times, when the wheat crop was an overproduction and the prices were down below the 50-cent mark at the farm, the hog was used to market wheat.

He has done his part in converting the by-product of the dairy and creamery into a merchantable article through his stomach. The feeder of a bunch of steers follows them with a drove of hogs that are fattened on the undigested corn feed the steers. Hogs take care of the by-product of distilleries, beet sugar plants, of the garbage of the cities and of many other factories where food products for human beings are manufactured.

In Texas and several Southern States they inform us that they can make pork at two cents a pound on peanuts, and more pounds per acre than they can with a crop of corn, letting the pigs do their own picking or digging, as you please to call it. The hogs can convert kaffir corn, milo maize, cow peas and soy beans into choice pork that can be cashed every day in the year.

Then, again, he is a forager; he can grow on alfalfa and clover and several other kinds of pastures, but especially is he adopted to converting alfalfa into lean pork and when balanced properly makes one of the ideal feeds for pork production at the cheapest possible cost.

Then, again, while the sheep, cows and horses will increase from 60 to 100 per cent annually, the hog will increase from 500 to 2000 per cent annually. He can be turned into the market as quick as a crop of grain.

These are some of the reasons why we claim that the hog is the greatest money-maker of the farm animals.—American Swineherd.
