

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

WITH a keen demand for vegetables and fruit, farmers have a chance to secure far larger profits than they can gain from grain growing or dairying.

Mixed agriculture is the need of the times, with smaller farms and better cultivation. There should be the greatest possible range of production when markets are easily reached. Farmers and their sons and daughters should aim to produce vegetables, or at least articles which are not commonly understood by landowners and for which good prices are paid.

A few gardeners make a large profit from salify, sometimes called vegetable oyster. This is one of the neglected products for which there is a quick sale. Many prefer it to the oyster, whose flavor it has a hint of, with all the disagreeable features of the bivalve flavor left out of it.

It can be cooked in many ways. As a soup, served with bread or crackers, it is delicious. Fried, either by itself or in a batter, it is quite as appealing as the real oyster when cooked in that way.

Boiled, sliced lengthwise, when tender and fried in butter, like the parsnip, it soon becomes a favorite.

Especially is salify a valuable addition to our somewhat limited list of winter vegetables, because it can be dug in the fall and stored in the cellar, or it can be left in the ground over winter and dug in the spring, when it will be found deliciously fresh and of fine flavor.

The culture of this plant is the simplest. It likes a rich garden loam made mellow to the depth of a foot and a half. Sow it in rows for convenience in cultivating and keep down the weeds. If the seedlings stand too thick in the rows thin them out so that the plants will be at least two inches apart. Sow quite early in the season.

Watch the catalogues of reliable seed houses for novelties. The trophy marked a new era in tomatoes and was really the first with smooth exterior and solid inside. We had had smooth tomatoes before, but they had big seed hollows inside, and all that we had with solid meat were exceedingly rough, like the mammoth Chihuahua.

But the production of the trophy was a success because it put this solid tomato inside a smooth skin, and ever since it has been the effort of breeders to keep it there. The best efforts of the breeders should now be devoted to the maintenance of the earliness of the extra early sorts, with increased smoothness. This has been attained in the Earliana, Globe, Success and others.

There are the cucumbers of which every seedman has his special strain. Of these I have found that there is nothing better than the combination of the White Spine and Long Green known as the Davis Perfect. It is longer and slimmer than the Long Green and, in my opinion, deserves its name.

Never follow the fall crop of lettuce with lettuce, for it is sure to be attacked by the wilt. This crop needs a change of soil as often as possible. It is easy to raise lettuce in the winter in a room that has an even and moderate temperature. This is better than mid-summer lettuce and sells at fancy figures. Lettuce is raised with little trouble in spring and fall.

When soil can be worked in the spring lettuce, radishes, onions and peas should be planted in the open garden. All of these can stand considerable frost. It is well to put in some early potatoes. The early vegetables bring big profits.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

An agreement between a landowner and another person that the latter shall occupy and cultivate a farm belonging to the former and that each shall furnish part of the seed, implements and stock and divide the products or receipts from their sale does not create a partnership, but the relation of landlord and tenant.

The owner and tenant of a farm leased for a term of years upon an agreement to divide the produce equally are tenants in common of the crops. If no time for dividing the crop is fixed when a farm is let on shares, the division is due when the crop is harvested and is overdue after a reasonable time has elapsed since it was garnered.

A tenant's agreement to deliver to the landlord half of all the crops is not fully performed until the shares have been divided and set apart. The title to crops grown on the land rented to a season cropper and the right to their possession are in the landlord until his claims are satisfied.

A cropper's share is due only when the crop is harvested. A cropper has no interest in the growing crop that he can sell or mortgage except in cases where the statutes provide otherwise.

Temper, not trouble, makes the misery of most men's and women's lives.

A Spartan Youth.

It was raining hard on Sunday and the little boy asked his mother if they were going to Sunday school.

"No, not today, dear," she answered, "it's too muddy and it's raining too hard."

"What, muddy?" said the little fellow, "it was raining yesterday and we went to school."

"The mother immediately made preparations to go—Ladies' Home Journal.

Miss's Fool Hero.

"Fooly" the hero of "Dear," began and then he arrived home along with a bundle of "Dear's" and a cat.

"The cat was full, too, were they?" returned he as he started.
